Toast of the town: City celebrates 'Art of Living Award'

By KENDALL KLYM

THE CREDIT goes to everyone, from Carmel's founders to its current leaders, for winning the International Art of Living Award, said Carmel Mayor Ken White at Monday's celebration of the honor.

The first American city to be chosen for the award, Carmel fit the requirements of being a city where local government demonstrates a history of making the quality of life of residents the top priority. Presented to cities outside France since 1988 by the French Académie Pour la Defense et Illustration de L'Art de Vivre, the award has never been granted to another American city.

"We're kind of overwhelmed," White said while standing on the steps of City Hall between French and American flags.

With champagne glass in hand, White toasted the city and reflected on an ordinance put into place when Carmel-by-the-Sea became a town.

Water allocation to help Carmel lift moratorium on remodels

By PAUL WOLF

THIS WEEK'S distribution of 150 acre-feet of recycled water for Peninsula development is expected to allow Carmel to lift its three-month-old moratorium on new residential projects that consume more water.

But the additional 8.75 acre-feet that the village is slated to receive each year is "nothing to get excited about," said Carmel Mayor Ken White.

"It's very little water," he said, referring to the allocation approved Monday by the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District board. "This will help a few people, but our overall situation won't change very much."

Still, with the dam defeated last year and the possibility of many years to come without a new supply, Carmel's plight has improved. Carmel's portion of the new allocation could be available by October, according to city and water district officials.

The water board has yet to finalize its formula for splitting the 150 acre-feet — roughly equal to 1 percent of the California-American Water Co.'s current annual production.

The water board decided tentatively to distribute the water evenly between Carmel, Monterey, Pacific Grove, Seaside, Sand City, Del Rey Oaks, the County of Monterey and the Monterey Peninsula Airport District.

Each of the jurisdictions may be asked to throw some water Monterey's way (perhaps two acre-feet apiece) to contribute to the proposed new wing at Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula. That project is technically Monterey's, but new hospital facilities will have obvious regional benefit, according to local and water officials.

Friends remember former CHS grid star as 'Prince of Carmel'

By SCOTT A. BROWN

THREE FRAMED pictures hung on the wall at Carmel's Chez Christian restaurant — a Monet, a Matisse and a photograph of a young football star at the East-West Shrine Game in 1967.

Women were clutching smaller versions of the picture to their chests. A man showed off a crimson jersey with the number 17 stitched on it — a souvenir from a junior varsity football game in which the Carmel High School quarterback completed his first three passes for touchdowns against an overmatched Pacific Grove team.

A man drank from a carafe labeled "In Memory of Danny, A Glass of Wine," and raised it heavenward. "The Prince of Carmel has died. He owned this town."

Holman as CHS QB in 1963.

The scene was as lively as the man who was being remembered as nearly 200 friends gathered Wednesday to celebrate the life of Danny Holman, who died last Friday of a heart attack in his Carmel home. He was 51.

According to friends, Mr. Holman lived by the philosophy, "If it ain't fun, don't do it." In keeping with that theme, an announcement at the front door of the restaurant did not read, "Closed for Wake," but exclaimed: "Party Tonight."

Daniel William Holman's flame seemed destined to burn too quickly, as congenital heart problems within the family were matched by Holman's high-living lifestyle. But those who gathered Monday evening to remember Holman, as the good friend and talented athlete, reveled in that flame's brilliance.

"People will always remember Danny as a football player," said friend Jack Nelson. "But in this room are three or four people who Danny took into his home when they were alone. He'd just tell you the key was under the rock."

In the early 1960s, Danny Holman was a star quarterback at Carmel High. Last season, he roamed the sidelines at CHS again, but this time as assistant coach of the Padres' junior varsity squad. Holman died last week.

CVVIC basks in accomplishment of buying 1.4-acre lot

With a $50,000 donation, Dodie and Roger Williams helped the Carmel Valley Village Improvement Committee purchase a lot (above) that had been slated for a mini-storage facility.

By KRISTI BELCAMINO

IT DOESN'T look like much now, but the weedy, rock-strewn lot is considered a plum parcel to the members of the Carmel Valley Village Improvement Committee.

After a year of negotiations, CVVIC purchased the 1.4-acre lot adjacent to Carmel Valley Community Park on Tuesday.

But it wouldn't have happened without the cooperation of the Marquard family, the owners of the land.

A year ago, the property was slated for a mini-storage facility. In fact, permits were in hand, and construction was about to begin, when CVVIC approached the owners about buying the land.

"We said, 'Wait a minute; we'd like to buy that property to add to the park and keep it as open space,'" said Peter Coakley, a member of the CVVIC property acquisition and management committee. "They kindly agreed to sell after much negotiation and by delaying their development."

Coakley said the Marquard family was "very kind" and patiently waited for the negotiations to conclude.

Financial wranglings were tricky. The asking price was $550,000 — a lot of money for a nonprofit association, but it eventually came together.

The Marquards "gifted" $150,000 of the purchase price because CVVIC is a nonprofit public-benefit corporation. And then, when CVVIC member Bill Wood died, he willed the association $100,000.

Local group says sea otters get slighted in revised plan

Friends of the Sea Otter to voice opinion during public hearings today in Monterey

By KENDALL KLYM

A REVISED recovery plan drawing the blueprint for the removal of the southern sea otter from the federal endangered species list has provoked the Monterey-based Friends of the Sea Otter (FSO) to stand up and take charge.

Friends, foes and others interested in voicing opinions about the plan may attend public hearings from 2 to 4 p.m. and 6 to 8 p.m. today at the Hyatt Regency Monterey on 1 Golf Course Road.

According to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, which developed the plan, the revisions would "passively allow" the population of sea otters to increase so that the animals will "likely persist" in the wake of a natural disaster or human-caused disturbance.

Passive preservation means fish and wildlife crews will stop creating offshore colonies by flying otters in cages to islands off the coast of California.

Sea otters must reach a recorded population of 2,650 and remain at or above that number for three years before the species can be taken off the endangered list. Friends of the Sea Otter doesn't think the current plan will ensure those levels.

Monterey group's opinion

A nonprofit conservation advocacy located on Garden Road, FSO supports Fish and Wildlife's intention to eventually take the animal off the list; however, it challenges the completeness of the plan.

"It's not a full blueprint," said Ellen Faurot-Daniels, science director of FSO. "It's like the blueprint of only the first story of a house. What's missing is issues of health."

Faurot-Daniels said a more complete plan must be developed in order to ensure a population increase.

She said the current draft addresses the threat of oil spills but omits other health hazards such as infectious diseases and an increasing mortality rate from disease.

In 1982, five years after the species was listed as threatened, the spring population was estimated at 1,346 by researchers for the National Biological Survey. The current spring population of the species, which lives along the California coast from Año Nuevo to Point Sal, is estimated at 2,278.

Southern sea otters are a common sight along the coves of Point Lobos State Reserve south of Carmel.

Faurot-Daniels said teams of experienced observers have discovered that the rate of population increase from 1995 to 1996 decreased 4.2 percent.

Researchers admit that counting sea otters is not a highly accurate practice, and depending on conditions, such as the level of kelp in the sea, otters are sometimes more difficult to spot.

On the scene

Standing on a rock outcropping at Point Lobos State Reserve, Faurot-Daniels spotted a couple of sea otters winding their way through the kelp. While pointing out the playful otters, she stressed her organization's desire to promote the U.S. Government's financing on research of health-related issues.

"What we seek in the recovery of the sea otters is that they're not only large enough in numbers but also healthy enough," she said.

Faurot-Daniels pointed out that increased populations may lead to malnutrition and lowered resistance to disease.

She said researchers have also found that 38 percent of sea otters examined during the last five years by the National Wildlife Health Center had infections at the time of death.

Fred Weddell, sea otter research project director for the California Department of Fish and Game in Morro Bay, said that threats other than oil spills "need to be addressed."

Under the old plan, he said, efforts to save the sea otter were concentrated on establishing offshore "translocation" colonies on Nicolas Island that would survive in case the Central Coast were engulfed in an oil spill the size of the Exxon Valdez spill in Alaska.

"The bottom line is the numbers declined," he said, referring to the homing instinct the otters displayed after being flown in cages to the island.

Under the new plan, "we're going to leave them alone so they can expand their range naturally as opposed to establishing colonies," Weddell said.

Faurot-Daniels said she will protest such a "hands-off"

Threats, conservation needs of sea otters focus of July 25 Monterey talk

AN UPDATE on the threats and conservation needs of Pacific Rim sea otters is the topic of a free American Cetacean Society lecture to be presented at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, July 25 at the Hopkins Marine Station Lecture Hall in Monterey.

Ellen Faurot-Daniels, director of Friends of the Sea Otter, will explore Congress' possible attempt to revise the Endangered Species Act and the Marine Mammal Protection Act.

'Tis the season for — corrals & chorales, yokels & vocals, broken bones & baritones

AS MOST people here well know, the annual rodeo holds forth in Salinas this week, while the Bach Festival is underway in Carmel.

For the uninitiated, few Carmel people give a fig about the rodeo, while 99.8 percent of Salinas folk wouldn't be caught dead at the Bach Festival!

There are many other major differences, as well:

1 — NO performers at the Bach Festival will have their genitals tightly strapped to make them buck with pain for the enjoyment of the crowd.

2 — No terrified young animals will have to run for their lives at the Bach, only to have their necks snapped back (and sometimes just snapped) by ropes wielded by men on horseback who then pounce on the helpless creatures, tie up the legs and then pose as if they'd conquered something other than a terrified baby animal.

3 — Nobody at the rodeo will worry about acoustics. (Surveys have shown that less than 2 percent of rodeo patrons know what acoustics are, and zero percent can spell the word.)

4 — Bach patrons do not go home wondering how many performers had to be put to death that night.

5 — BACH patrons do not have to worry about what they step in.

6 — Bach patrons do not have to come up with creative rationalizations to try to justify animal cruelty to their kids.

7 — Rodeo patrons have no big decision to make about where to go to eat after the performance. They can either have another hot dog right there at the grounds, or have one — perhaps with parsley on the side — at any of the scores of gourmet establishments nearby. It makes no difference.

8 — AT the rodeo, the object is to look like Michael Jackson, Burt Reynolds or Dolly Parton. At the Bach, the object is to NOT look like Michael Jackson, Burt Reynolds or Dolly Parton.

9 — Bach patrons can look their pets squarely in the eyes upon returning home from performances.

10 — Rodeo patrons come from as far away as Paris, Idaho. Bach patrons come from as far away as Paris, France.

11 — BACH patrons sleep better, both during and after the performances.

12 — Of the rodeo's 108 officers and directors, NONE of them are women! None! (This may explain the three beverages on tap at the grounds — beer, Coke and testosterone!)

13 — Bach patrons can hardly wait 'til next year. Rodeo patrons can hardly wait 'til their Alka-Seltzers kick in.

TODAY'S QUOTE . . . Colin Powell, who won't be actively participating on the campaign trail on behalf of the Republicans this year:

"There's nothing illegal, immoral or fattening about that position."

THE LADY on the phone said, "It's a real hoot! We all call it, 'Tammy Faye Meets Tonto'!"

She was talking about the new interior decor of Club XIX in The Lodge at Pebble Beach. (But "Tammy Faye Meets Tonto?")

"YOU'VE just GOT to see it!" she added, still chuckling. "I hear the designer PHONED the whole thing in from L.A.! It's soooo tacky!"

So nothing would do. I HAD to see it.

IT was 4 p.m. last Saturday when I walked in there with my hand over my mouth to try to muffle the snickers I knew I wasn't going to be able to stifle. I'm that kind of bumpkin — a lousy poker player.

There were very few people in the restaurant at that hour, but immediately a voice from over near the bar

Sheriff's Log

HERE'S A look at the more significant items of activity logged by the Monterey County Sheriff's Department from Tuesday, July 9 through Saturday, July 13.

TUESDAY, JULY 9

Carmel Valley: A man reported that his truck had been burglarized. Loss was estimated at less than $100.

Carmel Valley: A man claimed that another man had used 56 of his 4 x 4 posts without his authorization.

Carmel: A business reported that a bank had returned a customer's check because it had been listed as stolen.

Pebble Beach: A man who reported receiving a series of annoying phone calls for the past six weeks agreed to have a trap set up on his phone line.

Carmel: An unknown suspect with a key and combination to a floor safe reportedly stole money from a business.

Carmel Valley: Deputies responding to a report of someone yelling located a man sitting in a van who recently had undergone a dispute with his girlfriend. The man, who was under the influence of alcohol and was described as "belligerent," was arrested for public drunkenness.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 10

Carmel: A hardware store reported that its bank labeled two customers' checks as "lost or stolen."

Carmel Valley: A 54-year-old man requested that a deputy accompany him to the residence of his 19-year-old daughter. The father expressed concern for his daughter's safety and believed that her boyfriend wouldn't allow her to speak on the phone. The daughter was not at the residence by the time her father and the deputy arrived.

Carmel Valley: After being involved in a civil dispute, a man became upset and shot at his television and stereo with a .38 revolver. He agreed to surrender his weapon after speaking to deputies.

Carmel Valley: During the night a woman reported hearing her dogs growl at something on her property. She later reported seeing either headlights or a flashlight in the corner of her property. No evidence of prowling was found.

Carmel Valley: A woman who suffers from Alzheimer's disease reported a strange person in her house. The person turned out to be the woman's caretaker.

Carmel Valley: An anonymous caller reported hearing a couple engaged in an argument.

Pebble Beach: A man reported the theft of his cellular phone from his unlocked car.

Pebble Beach: A 26-year-old woman reported suspicious circumstances at her parent's house.

Big Sur: A woman reported that her ex-landlady would not return money to her.

Carmel Valley: A man reported that a woman on his property was in violation of a temporary restraining order.

Carmel: Security personnel reported two juveniles skateboarding in a parking lot. Both were cited.

Carmel Valley: A woman reported refusing to open her door when a "suspicious-looking" man posing as a Pac Bell repairman attempted to gain access into her home. Pac Bell was contacted and reported that no work was scheduled in the woman's area.

Carmel Valley: A woman requested a civil standby while she removed property from her former residence. She was told that, since she had not lived in the residence for the previous five months, she needed to have the homeowner present.

Carmel Valley: A property manager reported the theft of numerous appliances and fixtures from a house. The items were apparently removed prior to the foreclosure of the property.

THURSDAY, JULY 11

Pebble Beach: Deputies responding to an alarm found that an attempted burglary had been made through a window at a snack bar.

Big Sur: A man reported that another man had threatened to kill him if he did not pay back a sum of money.

Carmel: A woman reported receiving threatening phone calls from her ex-husband.

Carmel Valley: Deputies responding to a man's report that he had been robbed at gunpoint found his story to be unsubstantiated. The man was found to be off his psychiatric medication. Deputies eventually determined that he didn't meet the criteria for a mental observation hold.

Carmel Valley: A woman reported that her purse had been stolen from her vehicle.

Carmel Valley: A man reported a burglary at his airplane hangar.

Carmel Valley: A 44-year-old man found walking down a road was arrested for public drunkenness.

FRIDAY, JULY 12

Carmel Valley: Deputies found nothing suspicious after checking a truck in which someone had reportedly been living.

Carmel: A man reported receiving annoying phone calls from unknown juveniles.

Carmel: A landlord reported that a former tenant of hers had not returned a microwave she had let him borrow. The microwave was recovered at the tenant's mother's house.

Pebble Beach: A man reported that his truck had been rear-ended by another on 17-Mile Drive. The victim did not wish to press charges.

Carmel Valley: A man reported the theft of a generator and some tools.

Carmel: A woman reported the loss of her wallet at a grocery store.

Carmel Valley: A man reported that during the past two weekends someone had knocked over his fence in order to poach deer and wild pigs. Some of the carcasses had been left on his property.

Big Sur: A neighbor reported a fight between a couple. Both squabbling parties were subsequently arrested.

Carmel: A woman reported the theft of two bicycles from her yard. One bicycle later recovered was found to be damaged.

Carmel Valley: Lodi PD requested that a deputy make a welfare check on a woman who was despondent over family problems. The woman was found to be fine.

SATURDAY, JULY 13

Carmel Valley: A 68-year-old woman was contacted after her son was not able to reach her for five days. She was found in good condition and agreed to call her son.

Carmel Valley: Hardware store employees reported suspecting that three juveniles, who had purchased a piece of plastic PVC pipe and two end caps at the store, were planning to construct a pipe bomb. The three were contacted and the items were found to be skateboarding accessories. No further action was taken.

Council demands results before allocating funds

Venture with Monterey continues under watchful eye

By KENDALL KLYM

IF IT'S going to spend $23,600 in the 1996-97 fiscal year to be a member of the Monterey Peninsula Visitors' Center, Carmel wants to reap the benefits.

Before agreeing to fund 18.4 percent of the Monterey-based center in a vote of 5-0 July 11, the Carmel City Council demanded an explanation of the benefits of membership.

The facility currently serves five peninsula cities: Monterey, Pacific Grove, Carmel, Marina and Seaside. Each member must pay a percentage of its city's room tax to finance the center.

"We wanted more proof," said Mayor Ken White. "So the council asked for (this) meeting and recommended more information on where the money is going and what the effects are."

A growing skepticism

During the meeting, White, Councilwoman Barbara Livingston and Councilman Bob Fischer remained skeptical about the venture.

Livingston said only three Carmel lodging facilities take advantage of a special telephone system at the center, where visitors may call inns and hotels from a back room.

"We need to recognize the fact that (the center) really isn't working well (for Carmel)," Livingston said. "We have more than three hotels. I don't really know if the center is a great benefit to us."

White pointed out that the center was often out of or low on its supply of Carmel brochures. He then criticized Carmel business owners as deficient in their duties to keep up with the influx of tourists at the center.

"I'm very disheartened," White said. "Council would very much like to see stronger participation from the business people."

Fischer challenged representatives of the center to prove the benefits of membership.

Monterey's response

In response to council's criticism, Carl Anderson, Monterey public facilities director, told Carmelites it would be a "poor business decision" not to join in.

He said Monterey was acting generously by letting other cities be a part of its good fortune of having an information center that serves as a public-relations clearinghouse for destinations throughout the Peninsula.

JOE FITZPATRICK: Forgive us, but we actually like remodeled Club XIX called out, "May we help you?"

HE turned out to be John Jarousak, assistant manager, but I had no idea who he was, so I just said coolly, "I'm just here to see what's making the Laredo K-Mart so jealous!"

He had no idea what I was talking about, but I had been told the decor was "cheapo southwest," so I was already launching my thigh-slapping one-liners about it!

Jarousak left me alone to examine the place at my own pace (slow), and pretty soon I had taken my hand away from my mouth. I was scared and confused because I was finding the place highly attractive!

Was I losing my cynical touch? Had my sarcastic eye developed a cataract? You bet I was scared!

THEY had changed the color of those dark mahogany columns to a rich gold, which lightens up the entire room; the chairs have a tight pattern that looks somewhat southwest but blends nicely; and the strong colors of the pictures on the walls give the whole place a snap and an elegance I found highly appealing.

The decorator and the management may hate me for this, but I see the new decor as having an intriguing Mexican influence (mysterious, not hokey) that adds a flair and an excitement that has never been there before!

OK, to be blunt, Club XIX no longer looks like an elephant burial ground where the only things served are gruel, Maalox and Geritol!

One more thing — in the outdoor section of the restaurant they have added a large fireplace at each end, making it comfortable out there for diners at any time of day or night (unless it rains). A shrewd addition!

GOOD old Mario Beretti is manager of the place (where have I been?), and Lisa Magadini is chef. Lunch is served seven days a week from 11:30 a.m. to 4 p.m., and dinner 6:30 to 10 p.m.

I apologize to the lady on the phone for not joining in her hilarity, but dang — I LIKED the place!

BUT then again, who ever accused this column of having taste?

THESE FOOLISH THINGS . . . Remember a couple of years or so ago when there was a Chinese restaurant down a flight of stairs on Dolores near Fifth in Carmel? (Across from the post office.)

Well presto! That place is now occupied by — another Chinese restaurant! This one is called Bong!, a name I like, but one which has no special meaning in Chinese, I'm told.

ANYWAY, Bong! is open seven days a week, 11 a.m. to 9 p.m., and offers the vast array of Chinese selections and specials found at many such eateries — plus hamburgers, cheeseburgers, grilled ground round steak and New Yorks!

UP at San Carlos and Fourth, also in Carmel, the well-regarded California Thai restaurant has been sold by Pachara and Justin Hanley to Yok-Unn Brothers, Inc., of Los Angeles.

Under the new ownership, the menu will remain very much the same, and while only dinner is being served currently (5 to 9:30 p.m.), it will open for lunch daily at noon beginning Thursday, Aug. 1.

MEANWHILE . . . Over there at The Barnyard, restaurateuring gets curiouser and curiouser!

Last week we reported about an eatery there that wanted everyone to know they were NOT engaged in Chinese arms smuggling! We never really suspected them at all, but maybe it's good to come right out foursquare with a peremptory strike and dash any rumors that might arise in the future!

NOW this week we have another restaurant operator there who proudly announces that he fully GUARANTEES his food and service, and if you're not satisfied, you don't pay!

Hoo-boy! May the luck of the Swiss leprechauns be with him!

THE RESTAURANT is Lugano, a Swiss bistro, and the proprietor is owner-chef Andre Lengacher.

That policy may sound like a great publicity-grabber, but I worry about it doing him in when high school and college kids get wind of it! Good old Andre just may get his schnitzel cleaned!

AT any rate, stout heart, Andre!

COUNCIL

Mayor Ken White pointed out a situation in which one of the center's docents was presumed to have advised tourists with a three-hour time limit not to visit Carmel.

"Is this happening?" White asked.

Anderson said that three hours was not really enough time to see even Monterey, and the docent was probably trying to accommodate the tourists by telling them to remain in Monterey.

In a final effort to influence the council, Anderson pointed out that Carmel would have to pay only $15,301 instead of $23,600 if Monterey County joins the Monterey Visitors' Center.

According to the Monterey Public Facilities Department, a conclusion about the deal with the county will be reached by the end of the week.

Citizens' views

The council remained steadfast, seemingly unconvinced but willing to hear from the public, which, for the most part, was in favor of the venture.

Local innkeeper Gary Luce pledged his allegiance to the Monterey center on documented proof that he has benefited from Carmel's participation.

He credited the center with generating 5 percent of the occupancy of his seven inns for the past year.

"I think it's a wise investment to support," Luce said. "Let's keep in mind that it's a Peninsula visitors' center. Maybe people will stay overnight in Monterey, but they can come the next day to Carmel."

Several other innkeepers also expressed their support of joining the center.

Natural rivalry

Carmel resident Linda Anderson, a skeptic of the venture, expressed concern about the natural rivalry between each Peninsula city to be the No. 1 tourist destination. She said the problem with the center was its location.

"This has to do with allegiance to Carmel, not to other cities," she said. "We have three visitors' centers: the CBA (Carmel Business Association), one at First Murphy and a private visitors' center."

In response to White's criticism of the Carmel business community, Eddie Johnson, president of the Carmel Business Association, admitted that the community was "somewhat derelict in the past year" in communicating with the visitors' center, but the situation would improve.

"We're putting together a positive program," Johnson said.

Council shows support

Once the public hearing was over, council responded to the business community's plea for another chance.

"I never intended to vote against this," Fischer said.

After agreeing to vote in favor of the venture, White issued a warning to local business owners: "Next year you're going to have an awful hard time getting this approved if we don't see some improvement," he said.

Perhaps in response to council's hard-line approach, the Monterey Visitors' Center was brimming with brochures about Carmel five days after the council meeting.

WANTED: GOOD HOME

My name is Darwin and I'm looking for a new home...I'm a Belgium Terveran mix, born in alaska but living in Carmel with my foster family for the past three months. I love it here, and am looking for a responsible adult, who need companionship, exercise, and complete loyalty. I'm not terribly fond of children but adore fine furnishings and good food. I'm extremely well behaved, have a certificate from Obedience School, and come with my own traveling crate, sheepskin bed, toys, bowl and updated medical records. I do require occasional brushing and I would like to take you for a walk a couple of times a day. I don't want to go to the SPCA but if someone doesn't adopt me soon, I fear that will be my fate. Please call my foster mother,

'Clear-cut case of murder-suicide'

Carmel Valley couple's troubled marriage ends in tragedy — husband shoots wife, himself

By DOUG THOMPSON

Jeff Vandervort, 39, who sheriff's deputies say murdered his wife and then committed suicide last Saturday morning at his home on Tassajara Road in Carmel Valley, is shown here from a 1975 yearbook photo during his senior year at Carmel High School.

THE CHILDREN always will fondly remember their mother's love of country-western music and French Vanilla Vienna coffee.

For Penelope G. Vandervort's three children — ages 21, 16 and 13 — those memories, along with many others, are all that they'll have to hold on to.

Mrs. Vandervort, 42, described by others who knew her as a "wonderful person, mother and wife," was shot three times in the arms and torso by her husband, Jeffrey Vandervort, last Saturday morning at the couple's Tassajara Road home just off Carmel Valley Road, 15 miles east of Carmel Valley Village in Cachagua.

Mr. Vandervort, 39, a Carmel native, then turned the gun on himself and, according to the Monterey County Coroner's Office, died from one shot to the head.

"It's a very clear-cut case of murder-suicide," said Monterey County Sheriff's Investigative Sgt. Terry Pfau. "The weapon used in the case was an extremely powerful handgun."

The Vandervorts, married 17 years ago, had been experiencing domestic problems for "several months," according to sheriff's department reports. Pfau said deputies had responded to a call of domestic violence involving the Vandervorts in 1992.

Mrs. Vandervort had not been living at the Tassajara Road home for the past six months, but, according to Pfau, had returned Saturday along with her 21-year-old daughter, January Van Ausdall, "to talk about the sale of the house and the settlement of the relationship."

Pfau said the daughter left the premises and returned approximately 15 minutes later, only to discover the bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Vandervort.

'Giving person'

"She was a most giving person who gave fully from her heart," said Joleen Skinner, Mrs. Vandervort's niece. "We will miss her greatly."

Mrs. Vandervort was employed as a certified nurses' aide and in-home companion, and also had served a long tenure with the Monterey County Elections Department as inspector of the Tularcitos School voting precinct in Carmel Valley.

A gathering for family and friends of Mrs. Vandervort, whose maiden name was Branstetter, is scheduled for 10 a.m. Saturday at the Skinner Ranch in Jamesburg.

A memorial fund has been set up for the three children — January, 21; Jeffrey, Jr., 16; and Barbara Jean "Bean," 13 — through Bank of America. Contributions can be made to the Penny Vandervort Memorial Fund and mailed to P.O. Box 2222, Monterey, CA 93942-2222.

In addition to her children, Mrs. Vandervort is survived

Youth program puts focus on quality, not quantity, of work

By KRISTI BELCAMINO

Thanks to the Monterey County Summer Youth Employment Training Program, these four youths — Jose Mendez, Juan Acuña, Mario Cardoza and Carlos Ocegueda — are spending their summer working at Santa Lucia Community Preserve at Rancho San Carlos in Carmel Valley.

PHOTOS/KRISTI BELCAMINO

WORKING IN the lettuce fields is long, hard work, where even going your fastest is not fast enough, especially under the watchful eyes of older and more experienced brothers, uncles and cousins.

Pride and honor propelled Carlos Ocegueda, 16, to work hard and fast, despite an aching back, pounding sun and the discouraging sight of the seemingly endless rows of lettuce.

But, this summer, Ocegueda's job is different — instead of working in the lettuce fields, he works at Santa Lucia Community Preserve at Rancho San Carlos in Carmel Valley.

The emphasis at the ranch is on quality of work rather than quantity. And instead of developing the fields, it seems it's more important to develop the person.

Ocegueda, along with Mario Cardoza, 15, Jose Mendez, 15, and Juan Acuña, 16, make up the work crew that has been digging wells, picking native grass seeds and planting tree seedlings at the preserve since June 17.

The four young men, all from Salinas, are working at the ranch through the federally-funded Monterey County Summer Youth Employment Training Program.

"The program is designed to provide meaningful work experience for youth who have had limited exposure to the world of work," said Joseph Werner, executive director of the private industry council of the Monterey County Office for Employment Training. "The goal is to establish and design community-based projects to improve the infrastructure of communities."

Under this program, Monterey County youth have worked in Los Padres National Forest, built trails, restored historical landmarks, fixed up a baseball diamond in Marina and removed graffiti.

But, in addition to the benefit to the community, equally important is the experience.

"It encourages youth to understand what employment is all about and set goals for the future," said Werner. "Many kids between 14 and 21 have yet to realize the nexus between good education and a better job — how math or science or English will assist them to receive a job they are more suited for or happier in."

Another salient aspect of the program is "academic enrichment." Werner said that 200 of the 900 youth employed this summer are also participating in some academic activity, including classes on remedial skills, such as math, reading and writing, or vocational classes, such as keyboarding and business.

Out at the ranch

After only two weeks working on the ranch, the four young men already seem to have become friends. They frequently tease one another and it is obvious when they work that they know all about teamwork.

The terrain they work around — in the greenhouse, in the fields, in the woods, along the river — varies, just as their work duties do. They have already seen an abundance of animals, including deer, bats, wild boar, wild turkeys and rabbits.

They all agree that picking the native grass seeds is "easy, but boring," but all say they like their jobs.

The first day they went ambitiously to work on a small plot of the seeds, but landscaper Joe Culp told them to slow down.

It wasn't what Ocegueda was used to.

"Joe said that it didn't matter how long it took to get the seeds as long as we were doing it right," said Ocegueda.

Because of the obvious care and concern Culp has for the boys, he quickly earned their respect.

They defer to the soft-spoken man frequently: "Ask Joe," they respond to certain questions.

For Salinas' Juan Acuña, the youth employment program has sparked his interest in becoming an arborist.

Suzanne Sawyer, of the Santa Lucia Preserve, said the program gives them a place to work away from their hometown.

"This is something really unique and different, to be in Carmel Valley and work on a 20,000-acre ranch and work outdoors all day," she said.

And she is pleased with the boys' work so far.

"They've already accomplished a lot," said Sawyer. "We'll have a real productive summer. It's been fun to get to know them."

She said the experience also benefits the boys on a personal level.

"It gives them some self-confidence and something to be proud of," she said.

The boys are evaluated twice during the summer, and a file is developed that can be used for college recommendations, scholarships or other employment opportunities.

Ocegueda said he plans to pursue a career in agriculture, and Acuña's experience at the ranch has sparked his interest in becoming an arborist.

Although working at the ranch instead of the fields means $2 an hour less for Ocegueda, he doesn't seem to mind.

His eagerness to talk about his work on the ranch, the way he explains the process of culling native grass seeds and the way he carefully demonstrates how to plant a Valley Oak seedling — all this, combined with the smile on his face, say it all.

by her mother, Barbara Branstetter of Carmel Valley; a sister Brenda Lambert of Seaside; a brother "Branny" of Carmel Valley; and numerous nieces and nephews. She was preceded in death by her father, Milton, in 1990, and her brother, Jimmy, in 1970.

Friend recalls couple

Peter Scardina, a Cachagua resident and friend of the Vandervorts, said he took in the couple and their children about 13 years ago. The Vandervort family lived with Scardina and his wife for six months "before they got their feet back on the ground."

"They were both friends of mine," Scardina said, fighting back tears. "I loved them both."

Scardina described Mrs. Vandervort as a very instrumental force "in keeping the household together."

"She was a wonderful person, a very happy person," Scardina recalled. "She was a wonderful mom and wife."

Of Jeff, Scardina said he was a "good friend of mine who obviously took a wrong path. You don't shoot your wife and then yourself if something isn't wrong."

For Mr. Vandervort's uncle, Dale Vandervort, the trail of Saturday's events has left him in a state of shock.

"I still can't even believe it," said Dale Vandervort, a Carmel Valley resident. "I've known him all of his life and I never knew a better kid. This is completely out of character."

Pfau said sheriff's deputies had been alerted that drugs might have played a role in Saturday's events, but that "there was no sign of personal use in the house."

"As a younger person, Jeff was gregarious with a heckuva sense of humor," Scardina remembered. "He was always playing practical jokes. But he must have got misled somewhere."

Carmel High School days

Mr. Vandervort, born Feb. 8, 1957 at the old Community Hospital in Carmel, graduated from Carmel High School in 1975. He played on both the varsity basketball and baseball teams.

He was described by relatives as an avid hunter and fisherman, and was a cabinet maker and carpenter by trade.

He is survived by his parents, Gene and Joan of Carmel Valley; two brothers, Rusty and Neil of Carmel Valley; a sister, Lynn Christensen of Carmel; and seven nephews.

The family is planning private memorial services.

DOWN IN THE DUMPS

■ Fighting back: County forms task force to help curb growing problem of illegal dumping.

By KENDALL KLYM

MONTEREY COUNTY refuses to be dumped on any longer.

In response to illegal dumping at various sites throughout the county, including several around Carmel Valley Road, the Monterey County Department of Public Works, Sheriff's Office, Department of Health and District Attorney's Office have formed a task force to beef up their battle against polluters.

Garbage and trash breed flies and rats, which can cause the transmittal of disease, said Walter Wong, director of environmental health for the county. "Now, dumping of garbage, trash and toxics are getting out of hand in the county," he said.

The task force's plan to curb dumping will focus on the following:

■ Apprehension of offenders.

■ Increased efforts to ensure prosecution.

■ Notification of the public about the risks and dangers of dumping.

■ Increased patrol.

Because of budget cutbacks, the county has only one litter guard to supervise 1,280 miles of county roadways.

"During the last couple of years, the problem has increased so much, we simply can't keep up with it," said Ron Lundquist, deputy public works director for the county. "We see furniture, mattresses, garbage, everything, including household waste."

Lundquist described the growing popularity of disposing road oil in containers such as milk cartons and leaving them on the side of the road.

On patrol

In the rural areas around Monterey and Carmel, the situation is not as dire as in areas around Salinas and the northern part of the county, said Don Collins, county maintenance manager for the Public Works Department. On a trip along Carmel Valley Road, Collins found a pile of mattresses.

"You know, landfills recycle mattresses," Collins said while looking underneath the abandoned beds. "When you have wet garbage, you can get rats."

Collins drove into Monterey, traveling along Aguajito Road, where he stopped at two illegal dump sites. Each was virtually free of trash.

"These two areas were really bad at one time," he said.

Collins said that the northern part of the county is much worse and attributed the cleaner roads around Monterey and Carmel to an increased sense of awareness and respect for the land.

However, he said, Monterey residents are not completely cleared from depositing trash illegally.

Wong said dumping of any amount of household items can eventually lead to diseases such as polio and typhoid.

No documentation exists linking Monterey County dump sites to the diseases.

County needs help

Due to the lack of personnel and the abundance of roads with illegal dump sites,

CITY OF CARMEL-BY-THE-SEA ORDINANCE NO. 96-06 AN ORDINANCE AMENDING STANDARDS FOR DRIVEWAYS OVER PUBLIC RIGHTS-OF-WAY

WHEREAS, the City's streets were laid out in a rectangular grid without respect to topography of vegetation; and

Whereas, the City has developed its streets by paving only a portion of the full dedicated width so that adjustments can be made to respond to topographic irregularities and to trees; and

WHEREAS, this leaves a portion of the dedicated width of streets as unimproved right-of-way; and

WHEREAS, most City streets are paved with asphalt; and

WHEREAS, the City has adopted standards for extending private driveways over the unimproved right-of-way to connect with the paved street edge; and

WHEREAS, when driveway materials are made of materials other than asphalt these existing standards can produce a poor visual transition from driveway to street edge.

NOW, THEREFORE, the City Council for the city of Carmel-by-the-Sea does ordain as follows:

SECTION ONE

Section 12.24.020(A) shall be amended as follows:

12.24.020 Permit—Conditions. No permit shall be issued under Section 12.24.010 unless the proposed alteration or project complies with the following:

A. the maximum width of any driveway shall not exceed twelve feet as measured at the front property line or at any point between the front property line and its connection with the street pavement edge. A flare of a thirty-inch radius shall be allowed at each side of the driveway at the street pavement edge connection. There shall be a short return of asphalt material at the street connection for transition of street to driveway. The length of this return shall be approved by the Director of Public Works. SECTION TWO. SEVERABILITY. If any part of this ordinance is found to be unenforceable, such finding shall not affect the enforceability of any other part.

SECTION THREE. EFFECTIVE DATE. This ordinance shall take effect 30 days after final adoption.

PASSED AND ADOPTED BY THE CITY COUNCIL FOR THE CITY OF CARMEL-BY-THE-SEA this 9th day of July, 1996 by the following roll call vote:

AYES: COUNCIL MEMBERS: Fischer, Hazdovac, Hydorn, Livingston, White.

ALLOCATION

The 150 acre-feet are being made available from the two-year-old Pebble Beach Reclamation Project, which recycles water by treating sewage at the Carmel Area Wastewater District plant at the mouth of the Carmel Valley.

The project is anticipated to produce more than 800 acre-feet of recycled water a year. But for now, bugs in the system have kept the yield to only 729 acre-feet.

Opposing voices

The water board approved the allocation despite considerable opposition voiced at Monday's public hearing.

Voting for the allocation were Chairwoman Darlene Burkleo, David Pendergrass, Lou Haddad and Sam Karas. Dissenting were Dick Ely (Carmel's representative), Robert Ernst and Jim Hughes.

A majority of speakers said the water board shouldn't distribute more water in the face of an ongoing shortage, state sanctions against the Cal-Am for river overpumping and a possible lack of environmental data.

The MPWMD staff, however, conducted an initial study that determined the impacts would be minimal and an environmental impact report was unnecessary.

Robert Greenwood of Carmel Valley used a financial metaphor to describe what he called the poor logic of allocating water during a shortage: "When you have an overdraft at the bank, you don't write checks — you apply your disposable income to that debt."

In other words, opponents argued, don't reuse the water you've saved.

Hughes stressed the shortfall in reaching the 800 acre-foot production goal.

The majority of the board, however, was swayed by the united stand of six Peninsula mayors. "This is a critical situation for our economic survival," said Pendergrass, a director who is also the mayor of Sand City.

Furthermore, Pendergrass distinguished between "recycled" water and "new" water being allocated for new uses.

Meanwhile, the jurisdictions within the MPWMD look forward to having more water at their disposal.

The even distribution of water, if finalized, would have a bigger impact on small communities like Carmel, rather than large ones like Monterey.

In April, the Carmel Planning Department stopped accepting applications for residential projects requiring new hookups.

Because Carmel has only 50 remaining vacant lots, the new water will help mainly those who plan to remodel.

Theoretically, 18.75 acre-feet can provide water for 400 remodels. However, Carmel policy makers may wish to stow away some acre-footage for commercial uses, greenbelts and future projects, such as the Sunset Center renovation and Rio Park improvements.

Rick Tooker, senior planner who tracks the city's water allocation, said it is reasonable to expect some water will be made available for residential use by October.

Water board rejects call for immediate rationing, moratorium

By PAUL WOLF

THE WATER board rejected a request for rationing, a Peninsula-wide moratorium on connections and the end to water district programs that award "credits" for saving water.

Directors, echoing the sentiment of many who spoke up at the public hearing, said such stringent

Dick Nimmons, Joyce Herman helped guide CVPOA

By KRISTI BELCAMINO

TWO FORMER board members of the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association, Joyce Ann Herman and Richard T. Nimmons, have died.

Herman, 71, died July 4 at Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula. Nimmons, 82, died June 21 at Harrison Hospital in Bremerton, Wash.

"Dick Nimmons was probably the best CVPOA president that we ever had," said Ileene Franks, who has served on the board since 1987, including stints as president, treasurer and coordinator. "He's definitely someone I judge other presidents by."

Franks said Nimmons was able to take differing opinions of board members and find the common ground to reach a consensus.

"I think the organization was most effective under his leadership," said Franks. "He was just an incredible person. I know a few people who served on the board specifically because he was president. He was just a very up and positive person."

Herman had served on the board and had served as the chair of the land-use committee.

"She had a way of really getting to the core of what was happening — of finding the core of an issue," said Franks.

Joyce Ann Herman

Herman, born in Oakland, Calif., in 1924, was a retired environmental specialist and urban planner for Southern California Edison. She graduated from Beverly Hills High School in 1942 and received a bachelor of arts degree in geography from UCLA in 1950 and then a master's degree in urban and regional planning from USC in 1965.

In addition to her membership with CVPOA, she was a member of several other associations, including the Carmel Valley Citizens Subdivision Evaluation Committee, Lower Carmel Valley Citizens Advisory Committee, Lower Carmel Land Use Zoning Committee, the League of Women Voters and the Arroyo Carmel Homeowners Association.

According to her wishes, no services were held. Memorial contributions can be made to the American Cancer Society and the Hospice of the Central Coast, P.O. Box 2480, Monterey, 93942.

Richard T. Nimmons

Nimmons, born in Lincoln, Kan., in 1913, was a retired vice president of Pomona College. He graduated from Pomona College in 1935 and headed the college's news bureau for three years after graduation. He lived in Carmel Valley for 14 years before moving to Washington state in 1990.

Prior to working at Pomona College, Nimmons was a partner and vice president of Ivy Lee and T.J. Ross, corporate public relations consultants in New York City.

He was either an officer or a member of many Peninsula associations, including Carmel Valley Associates, Carmel Foundation, Monterey County Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Legal Services for Seniors and the Carmel Valley Village Improvement Committee.

In 1988, he received the "Good Egg" Award from the Carmel Valley Chamber of Commerce in recognition of his contributions to the community.

His first wife, Virginia Friedman, whom he married in 1938, died in June 1980.

He is survived by his second wife, Shirley, and numerous other relatives.

A memorial service will be held at 2 p.m. on Aug. 4 at Carmel Foundation's Norton Court, at the northwest corner of Dolores and Fifth.

Memorial contributions may be sent to the Carmel Foundation, P.O. Box 1050, Carmel, 93921 or Pomona College, V.P. Office, Sumner Hall, Claremont, CA 91711.

DUMPING

the county could use the help of citizens. Collins said he urges individuals and businesses to become involved with the Adopt-A-Road program, in which volunteers pick up litter in a designated area. In return, their names or business names appear on a sign along the respective road.

Collins also urged people to use the Monterey Peninsula Landfill and Recycling Facility in Marina, which charges a nominal amount to dispose of everything from mattresses to dinettes.

Robin Salsburg, recycling coordinator of the Monterey Regional Waste Management District, said the landfill charges $5 each for mattresses and $4 for other trash weighing under 400 pounds. Waste weighing more than 400 pounds costs $25 per ton. Furthermore, she said, Monterey does offer a mattress pick-up service.

In response to a task force presentation Tuesday, the Monterey County Board of Supervisors offered its support.

Supervisors Judy Pennycook and Edith Johnsen recounted their own experiences of driving by illegal dump sites. Pennycook empathized with the task force, citing a personal situation in which her own yard has been used as an illegal dump site.

"The supervisors gave us unanimous support for the task force," Wong said after the meeting.

measures were "premature."

The item was "tabled" until December when more detailed reports will be available on future water supply projects.

The multifaceted proposal for reducing demand and consumption on the water-poor Peninsula was forwarded by a group known as CARP, or Cal-Am Rate Payers, led by former water board members Fran Farina and Pat Bernardi. Environmental attorney Jane Haines has been assisting the group.

In her presentation, Farina, who served on the board until last year, explained that the shortage caused by drought has been supplanted by a shortage caused by lack of legal water rights.

Farina was referring to actions taken by the State Water Resources Control Board last year invalidating 69 percent of the California-American Water Co.'s water supply because of Carmel River overpumping.

While the state so far has imposed only mild conservation goals on Cal-Am, the legal predicament of the Peninsula is dire, Farina contended.

Directors, however, were not willing to make such a grim interpretation of the state's order, saying the weight of the hammer over the Peninsula's head is not as imposing as CARP suggests.

Pendergrass cited clauses in the state board's cease-pumping order that indicated that no action should be taken to endanger the "health and welfare" of Cal-Am customers.

CARP's proposal also sought additional requirements for the retrofitting of fixtures and a halt to further Cal-Am annexations.

Carmel council to target Fort Ord reuse plan Aug. 1

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

THE CARMEL City Council has scheduled a special session Thursday, Aug. 1, to discuss the local impacts of the Fort Ord reuse.

The meeting begins at 3 p.m. in the city council chambers at Carmel City Hall, on Monte Verde south of Ocean Avenue.The public is invited to attend and speak.

"It is really important that the public come to this meeting because Carmel will experience significant impacts from this redevelopment," said Carmel Mayor Ken White, who represents the city on the Fort Ord Reuse Authority.

White and his city council colleagues urge residents to study the Fort Ord Reuse General Plan and its accompanying environmental impact report, which outline the redevelopment of the former Army base over a period of 50 years.

Copies of the documents, as well as the executive summary, are available at City Hall and the Harrison Memorial Library.

Written comments, due Aug. 30, should be sent to the FORA, 100 12th St. Building 2880, Marina, CA 93933, or faxed to FORA at 883-3675.

approach at today's meeting.

'Not cast in stone'

Carl Benz, an assistant field supervisor who lists and records endangered species with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, said the plan "is not cast in stone," and the public is welcome to comment and present evidence.

"If new information becomes available, the plan could be changed," Benz said.

Faurot-Daniels has already taken advantage of such privileges by writing a letter to the Director of Region 1 of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, in which she pointed out that a 100 percent kill from an oil spill must be anticipated in calculating the minimum sea otter population. She also said that future research must be shifted from studying the impact of oil spills on otters to studying infectious diseases, contaminants, parasites and toxins, as well as the historical impacts of such threats on otters.

Joining FSO at the meeting will be the local chapter of the Center for Marine Conservation, which also opposes the revised plan.

"Our position is that the plan is inadequate," said Rachel T. Saunders, the center's director of ecosystem protection on the West Coast. "The figure (for taking sea otters off the endangered list) seems very low."

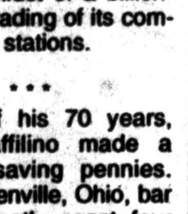
The Golden Years



By Myles Williams

During the 1980s, the Reagan Administration eliminated 17,000 jobs in the Social Security Administration. It took until the 1990s for the agency to recover from that 20 percent reduction in staff and the resulting chaos in operations. Now, a new cut is required by Congressional legislation to reduce overall Federal employment. In a period of five years the agency will drop 4,500 to 5,000 jobs, 7 percent of its staff, and close five of 10 regional offices. But this time, the agency says, services will benefit from increased efficiencies. SSA is in the midst of a billion-dollar upgrading of its computer work stations.

IN APPRECIATION: DANNY HOLMAN 1945-1996

DANNY HOLMAN: Miracle strike brought down King City

Born June 4, 1945, in Eugene, Ore., Mr. Holman moved to Carmel at the age of 6. His father, a music teacher, died of a heart attack when Mr. Holman was a CHS freshman. His mother, Catherine, or "Kay" as she was better known, played piano at the venerable Mission Ranch in Carmel.

In the history books

Indeed, it was at CHS from 1960 to 1963 where Mr. Holman carved out his place in local history as a legendary quarterback. Memories abounded of a 130-pound phenom with legs like a chicken and an arm like a thunderbolt.

"He was so skinny we had to tape thigh pads to both sides of his legs," said Buzz Rainer, Mr. Holman's junior varsity coach at Carmel.

While Mr. Holman had the talent to play on the varsity almost immediately, his diminutive size kept him with the JV's.

"I convinced (Varsity Head Coach) Hadley Hicks before Danny's junior year that he was still too small to play with those huge linemen," said Rainer. "But then I went home and told my wife that with Danny, we could beat anyone on the Peninsula, including the varsity.

"So we had Hadley over for dinner right before the season. My wife says to him, 'Hadley, Buzz says that with Danny on his team he could beat you any day of the week.' I said, 'Honey, you just put Danny on varsity.'"

All told, Mr. Holman led Carmel to 35 consecutive victories and was an all-league selection in both his junior and senior seasons. Jim Kelsey, who owned the Rinky Dink Coffee Shop and attended every Carmel High School football game for 25 consecutive years, recalled a championship game against King City in 1962.

"We're down two points with eight seconds to go and we're on our own 15-yard-line," Kelsey said. "Danny calls a time out and runs up to Hadley. 'It's in the bag,' he tells him. Then he runs back on the field, hits J.T. Thomas on a streak for an 85-yard touchdown, and we win league."

Dave Chaney, who would later play and star for King City High, said his older brother played against Carmel in that game. "We cried together in the car on the way home," said Chaney, now a coach and teacher at Carmel High.

Last season's Carmel High School junior varsity quarterback Chris Little gets a little schooling from the best of the best — Danny Holman, who served as the team's offensive coordinator and quarterback coach. Holman wrote the record book during his days at CHS in the early 1960s.

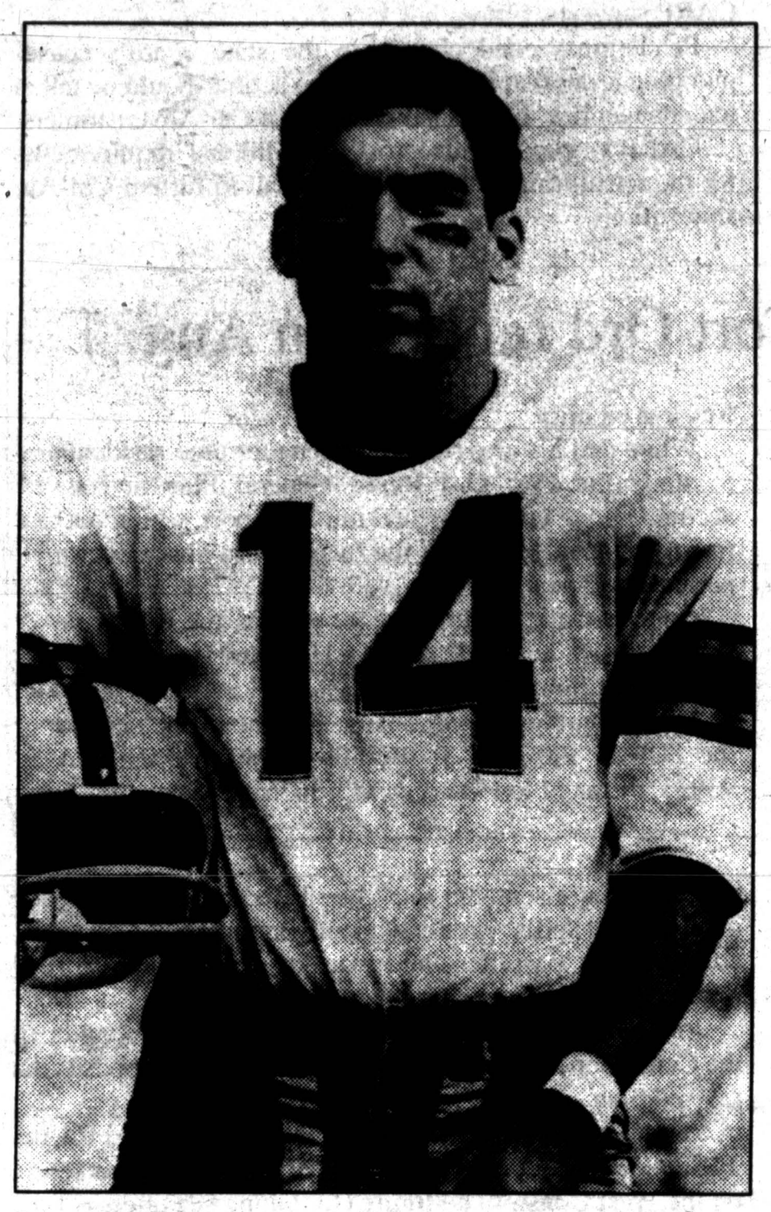
Rare company

Mr. Holman then attended Monterey Peninsula College from 1963-65. He and O.J. Simpson were the only two Northern Californians named as Junior College All-Americans by J.C. Gridwire in 1965.

That year, the 6-1, 168-pound quarterback led the Lobos to a 9-1 record and a 30-20 victory over Foothill College in the Fifth Annual Lettuce Bowl in Salinas.

Mr. Holman attended San Jose State from 1965 to 1967. He was thrust into action in the first game of the season when the starting quarterback fractured his ankle warming up. Mr. Holman threw for a school record 19 completions in a narrow 25-21 loss to Stanford.

In 1965, Mr. Holman's 61.5 completion percentage was slightly better than Heisman Trophy winner Steve Spurrier's. In fact, he led the nation in completion percentage, was sixth in number of pass completions, and was 15th in total offense.



Danny Holman represented San Jose State on the West squad in the annual East-West Shrine Game in 1967. But the Carmel High School product didn't take any snaps under center as that year's Heisman Trophy winner, UCLA's Gary Beban, played the entire game.

Mr. Holman's landmark college performance was on Oct. 15, 1966, when he led SJS to a 24-0 victory over Cal. It marked the Spartans' first football win over the Bears from the then Pac-8 Conference.

SI honors Holman

Mr. Holman was recognized as Sports Illustrated's Player of the Week, and was described by the magazine as having "a buggy whip for an arm."

In the wake of the big victory, SJS Head Coach Harry Anderson said of Holman's performance: "Danny has what a lot of quarterbacks lack — versatility in the type of ball he delivers. He can toss any kind of pass — long, hard, short, soft, lob or line drive, depending on the situation."

After his senior season, Mr. Holman was selected to play in the East-West Shrine Game, but didn't take a snap under center as UCLA quarterback Gary Beban, that year's Heisman Trophy winner, played the entire contest.

Mr. Holman left San Jose State with four single-game and five career passing records. He threw for 3,328 career yards and 19 career touchdowns. He had a pass-efficiency rating of 115.2, currently seventh in the school's history.

Mr. Holman is a member of San Jose State's Sports Hall of Fame and was recently named by the San Jose Mercury News to the SJS "Team of the Century."

Chaney, who went on to shine at SJS as a linebacker and also earned a spot on the Spartans' "Team of the Century," said Holman possessed an instinct for the game he has rarely seen.

"If he didn't have that attitude — like if he didn't like it, he wouldn't do it — he could have played for lots of years (in the National Football League). If he'd gone to New York, he'd have been like (Joe) Namath."

In the 1967 NFL Draft, it was the Pittsburgh Steelers in the eighth round, and not the New York Jets, who drafted Holman. He received a $10,500 signing bonus and an $8,000 a year salary from the Steelers, who at that time were one of the league's weaker teams.

"When he got home from being drafted, he went down to Derek Rayne and bought me a $100 sweater," said Kelsey. "He said, 'You're like a second father to me.' "

Mr. Holman spent a year on the Steelers' taxi squad and was released by the team the next summer.

> "We're down two points with eight seconds to go and we're on our own 15-yard-line. Danny calls a time out and runs up to Hadley. 'It's in the bag,' he tells him. Then he runs back on the field, hits J.T. Thomas on a streak for an 85-yard touchdown, and we win league."
> — JIM KELSEY recalling the dramatic 1962 victory by the Danny Holman-led Carmel Padres over King City High.

Lawitzkes in Milwaukee

"The question always comes up as to why Danny didn't succeed in the pros," said Dick Lawitzke, Carmel High's varsity line coach at the time. "My wife and I went to visit him in Milwaukee in 1967 when the Steelers were playing the Packers. I called up to Danny's room and he says, 'Coach, I'll be right down. I'm in the middle of a hot hand (of poker).'

"So, I sit down in the lobby with the rest of the players. They're all wearing suits. Then Danny comes down, and he's wearing lime-green pants, an orange shirt and a chartreuse handkerchief around his neck. He was just different."

But Mr. Holman's brief professional stint paled in comparison to his achievements at the high school and college level.

In 1969, Mr. Holman returned to Carmel and caddied at Pebble Beach Golf Links. With the exception of a brief stint as offensive coordinator for Southern Oregon College in 1972, he would remain in the area for the rest of his life.

Familiar face

Mr. Holman made his career as a bartender in taverns such as The Red Lion and Fanny's of Monterey and, most recently, Rappa's Seafood on Fisherman's Wharf and Carmel's Toots Lagoon.

Friend Phil Wales hinted at Mr. Holman's high-living lifestyle. "Danny loved football and horse races and drinkin' and golf balls. You'd go out with Danny and you'd never know who you'd meet — actors, politicians, athletes."

Mr. Holman was an avid traveler, making annual trips to the Kentucky Derby and to Wales and to Scotland to play on the famous golf courses. It was on a trip to Zurich, Switzerland, in 1992, where he met his second wife, Carmen, whom he brought back to live with him in Carmel.

Sadly, Mr. Holman's life was filled with much tragedy over the last two years. Carmen died in 1994 of a brain tumor. In 1995, his mother died.

Exiting Chez Christian on Monday night, each friend signed the label of a wine bottle in tribute to Mr. Holman. One man reflected for a moment and wrote, "Bet on No. 2 in the sixth at Pearly Gates Fields for me, Danny."

Mr. Holman is survived by a sister, Victoria Holman of Carmel; a brother, James Holman of Sparks, Nev.; and a daughter, Dina Lori Holman of Monterey.

The Almost Tolerable Fitness Column

By BILL BURLEIGH

Shoe investment can be lifesaver for feet, knees

IF YOU follow my advice today, I promise you will thank me for it. If you are a non-runner, and you pay attention, you're going to have a very pleasant discovery.

I hope that there are some horizontal folks out there seriously considering running or walking the Carmel Fine Arts 5K on Sunday, Oct. 6. If that is true, I have some important words for you.

The good news is that you will feel better when you cross the 3.1-mile finish line. Better than you do now.

The bad news is that you have to train. You can't just go from the couch to the starting line. Any athletic goal requires preparation.

The very first thing you must do is drive to a store that sells high-quality, name-brand running shoes. Don't buy the discount seconds or the knock-offs. The health of your feet and knees are too important. (Running shoes are good for walking, too.)

Shoe heaven

If you've never worn a running shoe, you are in for a treat. You won't believe how comfortable and light they are. Like wearing fuzzy slippers. But you have to choose carefully. You must get shoes that fit well.

There are two drawbacks to running shoes:

1. They can be painfully ugly. You have to develop a mind-set that says you are being sensible, not stylish. Some runners struggle with the bulky and flashy looks, and want to get a smaller looking shoe — at the expense of comfort. Resist that — it's OK to have silly looking shoes.

2. They are expensive — usually about $60 to $80. I guess we're paying for research and technology, like when we buy an expensive medication. And someone has to pay for Michael Jordan.

Don't buy them unless they fit perfectly, and are so light that if you drop one, it floats to the floor like a sycamore leaf in the fall.

And you might make mistakes, costly mistakes. I went through several brands before I found one that didn't hurt my heel or knees. I can't wear the world's most popular shoe. Michael can.

The only reliable brands are Asics, New Balance, Reebok, Nike, Etonic, Mizumo, Brooks, Saucony, Adidas, Diadora or Turntec.

If they are not listed here, don't buy them. One of these brands will fit your feet, no matter what shape they are in.

ILLUSTRATION/SHELL FISHER

Each brand has its loyal customers.

Why are you sitting there reading this? You should be on your way to a running shoe store, soon to be foot bliss.

Getting real

Let me tell you about one of the nicest things to happen in my 15 years of administering charity foot races. Martin Moss of Contempo Realty, one of the Carmel Fine Arts 5K race's substantial sponsors, has adopted a Charity Refund Plan: 10 percent of his gross office commission is donated to the charity of the seller's choice, in their name.

Martin just gave $675 to the Carmel Fine Arts 5K, for open space preservation, as the choice of his sellers, Claire Brenner and Sarah Tucker.

All right! Are you other real estate folks ready to follow suit?

Next week: We get a bit more specific about training for the Carmel Fine Arts 5K. Until then, Happy Feet. Literally!

Bill Burleigh, founder of the Big Sur Marathon and the Carmel Fine Arts 5K, is author of the book, Fitness Lite, which is available in local bookstores. His column appears weekly in The Pine Cone.

'Scrooge City' must be doing something right

AS THE village toasted itself this week upon receiving a prestigious international award, we ponder a familiar sound bite from just over a decade ago: Carmel is "Scrooge City!"

So declared then-mayoral candidate Clint Eastwood, who would go on to trounce incumbent Charlotte Townsend in April 1986. Extraordinary fame was on his side, but so too appeared to be genuine concern within the community about excessive regulation.

Critics of the two-year Eastwood administration cite residential and commercial projects they say shouldn't have been approved. But few remember an important fact: Despite his complete replacement of the planning commission, Eastwood didn't get very far in changing the Carmel General Plan to suit his tastes.

To a greater or lesser extent, Carmel was and still is committed to regulation and limits necessary to preserve its village character.

As the international Art of Living award suggests, Carmel may occasionally make life difficult for individuals who seek to exercise their property rights in the commercial and residential zones. But it rarely does so without some higher purpose: keeping Carmel Carmel.

Myriad of problems

Because this city of one-square mile is far from perfect, a steady stream of concerns come from every direction. All of the following are familiar:

- Necessary as they are, strict rules downtown can stifle businesses and add to their challenges of survival.
- Charm and ambiance are Carmel's good fortunes, but high property values and few affordable housing units keep out young families and ensure a near childless community. (Out of a population of 4,239, only 426 are 17 and under, according to the 1990 Census.)
- Motel and restaurant workers who help run the engine of the hospitality trade cannot afford to live within the city limits and must commute.
- Workers compete with customers for parking or must intrude on the residential neighborhoods.
- The reputation of Carmel as an "arts colony" is in danger of becoming a statement of past glories rather than continuing achievements.
- Corporate enterprises are making major inroads in the business district, threatening the "uniqueness" called for in the zoning ordinance and General Plan.
- At an alarming rate, the quaint cottages of yesterday are being replaced by luxury homes, injecting suburban values into a village setting.

Some of these problems — particularly where they concern market forces — are not immediately solvable by city officials. But awareness is a first step toward mitigating unwanted impacts.

The absence of problems surely was never a prerequisite for the French Academy known as A.C.E.D.I.A., which nominated and selected Carmel. Quality of life was the focus.

Despite the differences that characterize members of the current council, their unanimity at a meeting July 9 was striking.

In connection with the $8.4 million budget for the new fiscal year, the council agreed 5-0 to add only one position to the work force — a planner who would be in charge of cracking down on zoning code violations.

Only in a small, orderly "livable" village like Carmel would the council have the luxury of turning its full attention to fixing improper commercial uses, unauthorized signs, excessive window displays and illegal restaurant seating, instead of, say, escalating crime.

There may be some truth to the "Scrooge City" charge, but the news of this international honor shows Carmel must be doing something right.

The hard questions

Dear Editor:

The Pine Cone's July 11 editorial, "Now's the time to demand further limits on Fort Ord redevelopment," was responsible, timely and well written.

In my opinion, one of the most important functions of a local newspaper is to play a leadership role in encouraging elected officials and the public to make responsible decisions.

Your excellent editorial asked the hard questions — "Where will the water come from? Can our road system handle many more motorists?" — and aptly pointed out that the greatest danger in having such a bloated "road map" for the future development of this Peninsula is that "If you put it in the plan, it will happen."

I am sure that the great majority of Carmel residents would join me in thanking you for having the vision to understand the immense problems with this proposed plan.

As you suggested, all of us should send written comments (100 12th St., Building 2880, Marina, CA 93933; or 883-3675 by fax) to the Fort Ord Reuse Authority before Aug. 30.

Linda Anderson, Carmel

Valuable program

Dear Editor:

On July 17, another dozen Carmelites — several of them seniors — completed the Carmel Fire Department's seven-week course to prepare citizens for service in Neighborhood Emergency Response Teams (NERTs).

Assistant Fire Chief John Willett, Shift Commanders Mitch Castro, Bruce Myers and Chuck August, and Engineer Ian Watts introduced us to emergency preparedness (to "think earthquake," to "think fire") and taught us a great deal about actions we can take in case our community is afflicted by one of the wide variety of disasters to which California seems particularly prone.

They don't call ours the "Shake 'n' Bake" state for nothing.

We NERTs have not suddenly become skilled emergency service workers, but all of us are now far better prepared to look to the immediate needs of family and neighbors and — that accomplished — to lend a hand to professional emergency workers when appropriate, thus extending their capacity to serve the community.

The bottom line: Should some catastrophe strike our town, every citizen who can look to his or her own immediate needs means one fewer demand on hard-pressed community resources; help for a neighbor lessens that demand by two; service as a volunteer in a command center or search team lessens it by three; and so on.

I thank the Carmel Fire Department for its good work and the City Council and Administration for funding it, and I urge my fellow citizens to take advantage of it. We may all benefit a great deal.

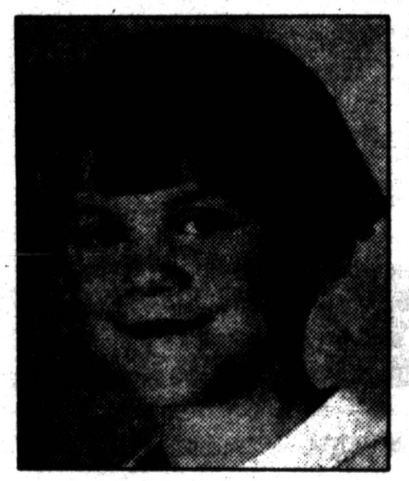
Visits to grandparents confirm Carmel's truly a magical place

By NICOLE DAVIDSON

MY FAVORITE place in the whole world is Carmel. I never have lived there, but my grandparents do. We would visit Carmel every chance we got. I loved going to their house in the valley.

We had to drive through deserts to get there. We also had to stop at gas stations, go around mountain curves, and sit for many hours just to get to Carmel and my grandparent's house. We didn't mind because it was worth it.



Nicole Davidson

Every time we went up the curvy mountain and smelled the salty seaweed ocean, I knew my family and I were almost there. When we turned onto a street with a church next to a bridge, I knew one Sunday that I would be going to that church with my grandparents and relatives. I knew after we went to church we would go to a barbecue with old friends.

As we are in our car going past the church and over the bridge, I remember that my sister and I would always want to go to the river under the bridge and catch baby frogs. Also, I knew we would skip rocks across the river where it is deepest, and I looked forward to walking in the river where I could wiggle my toes in the sticky, icy-cold water.

As we go over the bridge to the other side, we pass a barn where my aunt keeps her horses. My sister and I love horses, so we get to ride them with my

Doris Day's Best Friends

By DORIS DAY

From the cat's perspective

OK, LISTEN up cat owners. Those of us cats have rules as to just how our respective houses should be run. Here's a look — from the cat's point of view:

■ Chairs and Rugs: If you have to throw up, get into a chair quickly. If you cannot manage in time, get to a light-colored carpet. If a light color is not available, choose shag or Oriental. This also applies to other "accidents."

■ Doors: Do not allow closed doors in any room. To open door, stand on hind legs and hammer with forepaws. Once door is open, it is not necessary to use it.

After you have ordered your humans to open an outside door, stand halfway out and think about the merits of exiting or entering. This is particularly important during very cold weather, rain, snow or mosquito season.

■ Guests: Quickly determine which guest hates cats the most. Sit on that human's lap. If you can arrange to have Friskies Fish 'n' Glop on your breath, that's even better.

For sitting on laps or rubbing against trousers, select a fabric color that contrasts well with your fur. For example, white-furred cats go well against black wool clothing.

For the guest who claims, "I love kitties," be ready with aloof disdain; apply claws to stockings or try a quick nip on the ankle.

When walking among dishes on the dinner table, be prepared to look surprised and hurt when scolded. The idea is to convey, "But you allow me on the table when company isn't here."

Always accompany guests to the bathroom. It isn't necessary to do anything, just sit there and stare.

■ Work: If one of your humans is sewing or writing and another is idle, stay with the busy one. This is called helping, otherwise known as "hampering." Following are the rules for hampering:

— When supervising cooking, sit just behind the left heel of the cook. You cannot be seen and thereby stand a better chance of being stepped on, picked up, and consoled with a tidbit.

— For book readers, get in close under the chin between the human's eyes and the book, unless you can lie directly across the book itself.

— For writing or other paperwork projects, it is extremely important that you try to occupy the entire work surface. If writing is in progress, lay on the paper and occasionally hit the pen or pencil. Ignore all attempts to distract you. Remember, the aim is to hamper work.

■ Play: Play is important. Get enough sleep during the daytime so you are fresh for playing on your human's bed between 2 and 4 a.m.

Note: Begin people-training early. You will then have a smooth-running household. Humans need to understand basic rules. They can be taught if you start early and are consistent.

This adorable piece was shared by a fellow cat-lover. Isn't it great?

CARMEL: It's my favorite place in the world cousin.

Finally we turn into a court where my grandmother is picking fruits and vegetables in her garden for an enchanting pie.

My grandfather is sorting out his papers from work so he can visit with me and my family. I am always the first one out of the car to knock on their door. My grandparents welcome us and we go into the house.

The house is big with three bedrooms, two and one half bathrooms, a long kitchen, a living room, dining room, a glassed-in sun room, a nice piano and fireplace.

My grandmother and my mother get busy making plans for our stay in Carmel. We have a lot to do. We will go to Dennis the Menace Park, where we will play on the spinning wheel and play monster in a maze of bushes.

But my favorite thing is when we go jump off of the sand dunes at Pacific Grove and watch the whales jump gracefully into the air only to fall down back into the alluring ocean.

At Point Lobos, we may even play in the tide, go boogie boarding, find baby crabs and fish, or go body boarding. It is so much fun I don't know how my mother will pull me away from there.

Sundays at my grandparents are always wonderful. We go to church and visit friends. Like always, we go to a barbecue with old friends. We have a great time doing relay races. Sarah, my sister, and I kept on falling down in the shoelace race.

On this trip, after the barbecue, we went to the Monterey Bay Aquarium. It was a great deal of fun.

My grandmother and older brother Joe, went golfing at a Navy golf course. It was all green everywhere, but my grandmother likes Pebble Beach better. The rest of my family went home to pack.

The day we leave is always the saddest, but I will always remember the good times I have in Carmel.

And if I listen hard, I can hear the sea gulls and the ocean. It is the sound no one could forget. It is the sound of Carmel.

Nicole Marie Davidson, 12, lives in Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and wrote this piece on Carmel as part of a school assignment. Her grandparents, Dick and Mary Lou Ward, reside in Carmel Valley.

AWARD

"The key ordinance says residents are the primary focus of the city," he said. "This (award) actually ratifies what people have been trying to do here for 80 years — making a livable place for human beings."

Although none of the judges was present at the celebration, a woman visiting from France joined the revelers in toasting Carmel.

"I think Carmel deserves it," said Annie Weber, who was traveling through Carmel on a mission to collect data on arts and culture in America for a Paris-based journal. "It's a very special place. Carmel is so rich in the arts."

In a letter expressing her joy, Carmel City Councilwoman Barbara Livingston said, "Being chosen for this prestigious award is proof that Carmel's codes, policies and regulations that protect our village character are alive and working."

In honor of the award

Carmel will host members of the Académie's governing board in October on a tour of the city.

"This will be an exciting and happy time, since Carmel will be celebrating its 80th birthday party," said Councilwoman Paula Hazdovac.

In November, White will accompany a delegation of Carmel city leaders on a trip to Paris for an award reception at the French Senate.

CVVIC

Later, CVVIC members Roger and Dodie Williams donated $50,000, but that still left the CVVIC $250,000 short of the purchase price. That's where First National Bank of Central California entered the picture.

"They have so much respect for CVVIC and what we have done in the village, and we have such a good relationship with them, that they are loaning us the money at very favorable terms for one year," explained Coakley.

Now, the association is turning to the community for help.

"We are going to have to mount a major fund-raising campaign," said Coakley. "We will go to the community and ask for major donations from foundations and individuals and are hoping for a most generous outpouring for this very worthwhile cause."

Dodie Williams said she and her husband, Roger, chair of the acquisition subcommittee, donated funds because they believe it is important to keep the land open space.

"There's been enough built in the valley now," said Dodie. "I also feel it should be preserved for the next generation of people and children, and future generations so they can enjoy what might be put on that property."

Coakley said the committee hopes to use the land for extra park parking until the loan is paid off and then CVVIC plans to turn the parcel over to the park district.

"We are going to donate the property with the understanding that they will grass it and build public restrooms," said Coakley.

"We are hoping it will be something that everybody can enjoy — not some developer's idea of what we might enjoy," said Dodie. "The whole idea was to preserve it, to keep it from becoming another office building or something."

Police, arts community vie for 'city' at former Fort Ord

■ Will the up-for-grabs East Garrison of the former Fort Ord become a police training academy or an 'arts habitat?' Supes to consider the issue Tuesday.

By SUSAN HAWTHORNE

A GROUP of Peninsula artists who envision an "arts city" on the former Fort Ord face a crucial first hurdle in the planning process next Tuesday morning.

The Monterey County Board of Supervisors will consider the future use of a prime chunk of the former Fort Ord on July 23 at the Salinas Courthouse. At stake is the East Garrison, a picturesque and historic 77-acre parcel high on a bluff overlooking the Salinas River Valley.

The supervisors will decide among competing — and some say conflicting — use proposals.

Although there are other hopefuls, the two main contenders for the choice parcel are the Arts Habitat project of Artists Equity and the Police Officers Safety Training Academy proposed jointly by Monterey Peninsula College and the Monterey Sheriff's Department.

The East Garrison of Fort Ord is a nationally designated historic district. It is attractive as a site for reuse because of the number and variety of its buildings, and because its off-Reservation Road location is easily accessible from both the Peninsula and Salinas Valley.

First to petition for rights to the site was the local chapter of Artists Equity, led by Carmel Valley sculptor Richard Mayer. Artists Equity is a national nonprofit visual artists' association that lobbies for legislation of aid to artists.

I'm not against law and order. I'm for cultural enrichment and economic enhancement.

— Sam Karas, Fifth District Monterey County Supervisor

The proposed Arts Habitat would be an "arts city." Affordable studio and living space for artists would be the foundation for building a self-supporting enclave of the visual, performing and literary arts, and related services, that would draw visitors to the Central Coast.

Mayer was involved in a similar, successful base conversion at Fort Mason in San Francisco before moving to the Monterey Bay area.

Weighing the merits

The board of supervisors must weigh the merits of the project against the needs of law enforcement to determine which use best fits the redevelopment plan.

Fifth District Monterey County Supervisor Sam Karas says he hopes for a compromise that could accommodate both uses, but notes he has been a supporter of the Arts Habitat all along.

"I'm not against law and order," Karas says. "I'm for cultural enrichment and economic enhancement."

The Arts Habitat also would complement performing and visual arts programs being developed on the nearby CSU Monterey Bay campus, Karas says.

Magician brings show based on tricks Dickens performed to Pacific Grove on Saturday night

By BETH PENNEY

SAN FRANCISCO illusionist Dick Newton will suddenly appear on Saturday at 8 p.m., when the Monterey Peninsula Dickens Fellowship host a performance by the acclaimed magician.

Saturday's performance differs from the usual 20th century magic act. Three years ago, Newton became interested in 19th century author Charles Dickens's fascination with magic, and he has done extensive research on the subject.

The clean-shaven Newton dons a beard, mustache and period clothing for his Dickens act. He has even recreated the small cloth-covered table Dickens used when he performed magic for his family and friends.

Dick Newton

Dickens an "excellent magician"

Newton said that Dickens was actually an "excellent amateur musician." He added that although Dickens is well known for his interest in theater as well as in writing, "It's not known when Dickens first became interested in magic."

The writer's first performance took place at a birthday party shortly after the publication of his famous Christmas Carol in 1843.

"With the secrets of magic so readily available today from magic shops, by mail order, or in public libraries," Newton pointed out, "it's difficult for us to realize how different it was in Dickens' time. Secrets were closely guarded and magic shops were rare."

According to Newton, Dickens performed card tricks, coin tricks, and more complicated acts, such as changing handkerchiefs to candy, transforming a box of bran into a live guinea pig, and boiling a plum pudding in a gentleman's top hat. Newton has not revealed which of Dickens's illusions he will perform in Pacific Grove.

One-third of the words in the script Newton uses are Dickens' own, gleaned from a rare program of a magic performance and from Dickens's writings and letters.

Newton has performed his Dickens magic act for the Dickens Universe at the University of California in Santa Cruz and for the British Ring Magicians' Convention in England.

A professional magician for several decades, he performs regularly at San Francisco's Mansions Hotel and at other locations in the Bay Area.

The Monterey Peninsula Dickens Fellowship meets monthly in members' homes. Saturday's meeting will be held at 514 Park Street in Pacific Grove, where the performance starts at 8 and will be followed by the group's usual book discussion.

The public is invited to arrive at 6 p.m. for potluck dinner and conversation with the performer before the meeting. A $5 donation is suggested.

Banquets and Bach

"THE CARMEL Bach Festival is undoubtedly the finest summer festival combining music and food in America" is a statement I overheard and agreed with while lunching recently at the Thunderbird Bookshop in Carmel.

What was started in 1935 by local gallery owners Dene Denny and Hazel Watrous as a three-day event focusing on the works of Johann Sebastian Bach, his contemporaries and musical heirs, has mushroomed into a three-week extravaganza of concerts, recitals, master classes and symposiums interlaced with a potpourri of culinary companions.

Apron Strings

By Deborah Smith

Each Festival day through the closing Carmel Mission Basilica candlelight concert on Aug. 4 is crammed full of rehearsals, star-studded performances and receptions.

Once again the Wednesday evening dinners will be offered at the Mission before the 9 p.m. performances. Priced at $45 per person, the dinners will feature the artistry of Bird of Paradise Catering (which also catered the Back to Bock festival kickoff party held at Carmel Plaza Sunday evening, July 14; for coverage, see SOCIAL SPOTLIGHT, page 16B) as well as the Friday and Saturday evening dinners at Sunset Center ($40 per person).

Tickets for all these Bach bashes may be purchased by calling 624-2046.

Small army of volunteers

The Bach Festival could not function without its small army of volunteers, those people who do everything from picking up musicians at the airport to answering phones to ushering at the concerts.

In accordance with this principle, Bach Festival board members Jo Barton and Susan Aucutt, who call themselves "special cookies," mail out an appeal each year to ask for assistance in providing snacks for the musicians during rehearsals and performance breaks. This year's special appeal reads:

"(The musicians) love apples; breads and brownies; chips, cookies; crumpets & cupcakes; dates & dips; everything!; fruits; grapes; healthy stuff; ice cream; jelly donuts; kumquats; lemon bars; M&Ms; nuts; oranges; pizza & prune cake; raspberries; sweets; tomatoes; veggies;water & watermelon; yeastytreats; zest & zinnias."

Scores of local Bach enthusiasts always rally to the cause — including Midge Grick and Miranda Morris, who bake cookies each year — feeding the onslaught of hungry musicians.

Bring your special snack or financial contribution to room 11 at Sunset Cultural Center, the Bach Festival office. Rumor has it Maestro Weil is particularly partial to fresh pineapple!

"Anything that benefits the Bach Festival benefits the whole Peninsula," reflected Bird of Paradise Catering's Kasky as he dictated the following pre-concert recipes to me over the phone:

■ Grilled Salmon and Leeks with Tarragon Sauce
Serves 6

6 salmon fillets
1 bunch leeks, julienned
2 carrots, julienned
6 large mushrooms, julienned
3 shallots, diced fine
8 tablespoons butter
1 glass of chardonnay
1 cup rice vinegar
2 tablespoons fresh chopped tarragon
2 pounds butter, cut into chunks
Salt and cayenne pepper to taste

In 8 tablespoons butter, saute leeks, carrots and mushrooms until soft. Remove with slotted spoon and set aside. In remaining juices, saute shallots, adding wine and vinegar. Boil hard until reduced almost dry, then whisk in butter pieces one at a time. Stir in tarragon. Adjust seasoning with salt and pepper. Do not overheat. Prepare hot mesquite grill. Season fillets with salt and pepper. Sear salmon hot and fast.

Jon prefers barbecuing the fish until it is barely rare. Set aside. Place vegetable garnish on individual plates. Top with salmon fillets and sauce.

■ Polenta Pound Cake
Yields 4 cakes, which serve 30

1 pound soft butter
4 cups sugar
12 eggs, separated
1 tablespoon lemon zest
2 teaspoons almond extract
2 teaspoons vanilla
1 teaspoon baking soda
1 teaspoon salt
2 cup sour cream
2 cup polenta (yellow corn meal)
4 cup white flour

Butter four 8-inch loaf pans and dust generously with polenta. Cream the remaining butter together with lemon zest and sugar. Beat in yolks one at a time. Add almond extract, vanilla, baking soda, salt, sour cream, polenta and flour. Whip egg whites until stiff and fold into batter. Fill pans 3/4 full and bake for 12 hours at 350 degrees or until cakes pass the clean toothpick test. Cool 15 minutes before turning out on racks.
Cakes may be frozen at this point. To serve, slice pound cake and toast. Garnish with fresh berries and whipped cream.

'Apron Strings,' a cooking column by Carmel resident Deborah Smith, appears twice monthly in Peninsula.

Children's Fun Fair to feature arts, crafts, raise money for diabetes

THE NEWLY-CREATED Monterey Bay Area branch of the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation will host its first fund-raiser, a Children's Fun Fair, in conjunction with the Pebble Beach Equestrian Center Summer Classic from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday, July 27.

Families may attend the horse show for free and purchase fair tickets for $5. Tickets will enable children to participate in a petting zoo, rides, arts and crafts projects and carnival games.

Proceeds from the Fun Fair, sponsorships and program advertising go to diabetes research.

The Juvenile Diabetes Foundation International was founded in 1970 by parents of children with diabetes. The parents were convinced that if they raised enough money for research, a cure for diabetes would be discovered. In January of this year, a local chapter was established.

Those interested in joining the chapter or learning more about juvenile or adult diabetes are encouraged to attend a meeting. Information about meeting dates and times or the Fun Fair may be obtained by calling 626-6254.

Suzanne Etienne to be featured at Zantman

Etienne's work is favored by several celebrities, and she's known for creating art to match homes' color schemes.

A RECEPTION highlighting a new exhibit by painter Suzanne Etienne will be held from 4 to 7 p.m. Saturday at Zantman Art Galleries, Sixth and Mission in Carmel.

Etienne's colorful, cheery paintings adorn the walls of several celebrities' homes, including those of Christie Brinkley, Linda Evans, Dudley Moore, Harry Belafonte and Danielle Steele.

A former interior designer, Etienne is also known for painting custom works to match people's homes, including painting wall murals to match a room's color scheme.

Etienne holds a degree in fine arts from San Jose State University and has served as a graphic artist and an art teacher.

The exhibition remains at Zantman through Aug. 1. Information: 624-8314.

Black Box Coffeehouse at CSUMB opens with a bang

I HAVE seen the future of music on the Monterey Peninsula and I like it.

To be perfectly honest, I did not know what to expect last week when I made the trip out to the new Cal State Monterey Bay campus to attend the long awaited opening of Morgan Christopher's new venue, the Black Box Coffeehouse. Morgan had been complaining recently about the limitations of his small downtown Monterey coffeehouse, Morgan's Coffee & Tea, and he was looking forward to finally opening a larger venue.

The lineup of Martin Sexton and The Nields was impressive enough, but over the years I have come to lower my expectations when it comes to attendance at concerts, especially shows held on weekdays and at venues where anyone has to travel more than a few miles.

Last Monday at the "Black Box" (on the corner of North-South Road and Third Street on the CSU campus) I captured a glimpse of how the arrival of CSUMB should alter and enhance the music scene on the Peninsula. Playing before a standing room only crowd, Sexton and The Nields performed a pair of riveting sets which had the audience screaming for more.

Although a sit-down concert, a good number of people were dancing in the aisles, a scene more typical of clubs in Santa Cruz and in general unheard of on the Peninsula; for a moment I had to remind myself where I was.

Plugged In

By Stephen L. Vagnini

Playing a lively electric set that featured two encores, the Nields showcased the strong vocal talents of sisters Katryna and Narissa Nields and an overall stage presence that could very well land this folk/alternative group a major record deal.

The Boston-based quintet, in the middle of a five-month national tour, ran through a set of quirky original material in what was one of the better shows that I have seen this year.

Still, what was most satisfying about the inaugural Black Box performance was the attendance, a nice mix of students and locals that made the "long" drive out to what was once Fort Ord worth it.

Granted, there are kinks for Morgan to work out, but by late August, when his next show is planned, the Black Box should be ready.

Rock 'n roll alive at three spirits

And to think that less than a year ago I was commenting on the lack of interest in rock 'n roll on the Monterey Peninsula. I sadly watched clubs and promoters give up on the music.

Consequently, the handful of promising young bands that remained (Nectar of the Gods, Trial By Fire, and Lovers & Strangers, to name the most prominent) either broke up or took time off to reconsider their commitment. The local original rock 'n roll scene was dead.

All of a sudden I sense hope for young rock musicians. Obviously trends do not occur overnight, but suddenly a flurry of original bands have surfaced with new and fresh material and even more important, a place to play.

Thanks mostly to the owners of three spirits warehouse (Susan Collins and husband Brad Mallory, and Susan Platz) rock bands now have a local "user-friendly" venue. Whereas the Monterey Bay Blues Festival and the Seaside Sunday Blues in the Park concert series spawned an inordinate number of local blues bands, the warehouse now, with its weekly Sand Jam rock shows, seems to have given hope to a new generation of young aspiring rock 'n roll musicians in the Monterey area.

Last weekend three new promising bands played at the warehouse, located in Sand City at 361 Orange Street. Although Black Olive recording artists Push were a last-minute cancellation, the triple billing of Brave New World, Vera, and Justus were at last Saturday's Sand Jam #26, an excellent mix of new bands on the rise.

Vera (formerly Vera Lane and now in the running for "Best Unsigned Band" by Musician Magazine) featured the debut performance of their new singer Laney Baldyga in addition to a number of new songs.

Guitarist Greg Brown is just one of the stellar headliners at this weekend's KPIG Summer Fat Fry in Aptos. Take the Seacliff exit, park at Cabrillo College and take the shuttle.

Add to the list of new bands... the trio of South County groups slated to perform at Sand Jam #27 on July 27 (Tribal Dimension, S.T.U.B. and Drunk In Public) and a host of others including Xiola Blue, Foamscape, Free Ears (Tom Ayres' latest project), a rejuvenated Trial By Fire ... and it becomes apparent that a tradition is in the making over at three spirits.

Jazz at the Crossroads

Saxophonist John Handy moved to Oakland in 1948; in '53 he made his recording debut with Lowell Fulson. Whereas the talk around San Francisco today is focused on the so called "new" or "acid jazz," Handy has been on the cutting edge for close to 40 years.

Although the man was influenced by such early sax greats as Johnnie Hodges, Louis Jordan and Earl Bostick, Handy's approach to his art was altered forever after he heard Charlie Parker perform at the Say When Club in San Francisco. A few years later Handy made the move to New York City, where he was soon hired by bassist Charles Mingus.

Handy, accompanied by pianist Dick Whittington and bassist Peter Barshay, will perform at 7:30 this Saturday evening at The Jazz Store in The Crossroads shopping center in Carmel. Always in search of something new, Handy's collaborations include work with symphony orchestras, Brazilian guitarist Bola Sete, and Indian traditional master musicians Ravi Shankar, Ali Akbar Khan and L. Subramanian.

His latest commitment, though, has been with three gifted violinists, known collectively as Class. Their debut album, Centerpiece, is a collection of blues, jazz, and popular standards.

Whittington, one of San Francisco's better jazz pianists, is perhaps best known for his role as teacher and founder of the Maybeck Recital Hall in Berkeley.

Arts Habitat supporters resistant to idea of sharing Fort Ord with police

Local artist Heidi Hybl feels strongly that if the supervisors grant the Police Academy all the space requested by the Sheriff's department, they would "cut the legs off" the Arts Habitat program.

To be successful, the Arts Habitat "needs both buildings and open space," Hybl says. "There wouldn't be enough of either" if the sprawling Police Academy were also to be accommodated on the same land.

Providing space for both will be difficult, if not impossible, Arts Habitat supporters feel. "High-speed car chases, firing ranges, and the arts — they're not compatible," says Artists Equity board member Chris Hulse.

"It's a real guns or butter choice," says Mayer.

Public comment on the issue may be made by contacting Edith Johnsen, Chair, Board of Supervisors at 647-7744.

New thrust stage makes all the difference in sound quality

■ Opening Night Concert

By LYN BRONSON
Peninsula Music Critic

ABOUT AN hour before the 8 p.m. curtain on opening night of the 59th season of the Carmel Bach Festival, the dreary fog receded and the sun began to shine.

For the many Festival fans gathered outside Carmel's Sunset Theater to mingle and enjoy the brass ensemble music preceding the concert, it was an omen of good things to come.

And for the most part, they were not to be disappointed. The only less than satisfying event of the evening was the Festival's opening work, Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2, conducted by Maestro Bruno Weil and featuring violinist David Myford, flutist Damian Bursill-Hall, oboist Bernhard Heinrichs and Wolfgang Basch on Baroque trumpet.

Too rapid

The work raced along at too rapid a tempo, causing many ensemble problems that robbed the piece of the wondrous effect it can achieve. And for some reason, Basch was standing with the bell of his instrument facing into the orchestra rather than out to the audience, thus his sound didn't project well.

Whether the work was underrehearsed, or whether it was a case of "opening night jitters," I had the feeling that if the Brandenburg Concerto had closed the program (when the musicians were thoroughly warmed up), it would have been a more successful performance.

Concerning the second work on the program, Resphigi's "Suite No. 3" of the Ancient Airs and Dances, what can I say but "Wow!"

Not only is this a glorious work, but on this occasion it received a glorious performance. The Festival Strings never sounded better, and in the second section of the Suite, "Arie di Corte," the violas spun out a web of golden sound that was pure magic.

The first half of the program ended with violinist Elizabeth Wallfisch appearing as conductor and soloist in Bach's Violin Concerto in A Minor, BWV 1041.

Local audiences have come to expect a kind of stylish and energetic performance from Wallfisch, and she did not disappoint. She exudes confidence, charm and immense musical authority, and there is a lovely vitality in her music making.

Elizabeth Wallfisch

After intermission we heard the "Ascension Day" Cantata, Lobet Gott in seinen Reichen, BWV 11 featuring the Festival Orchestra and Chorale, directed by Bruno Weil and featuring soprano Rosa Lamoreaux, mezzo Catherine Robbin, tenor David Gordon and a Festival newcomer, baritone Christopheren Nomura.

Christopheren Nomura

Gordon, in the role of the evangelist, had four important recitatives, which he delivered with style. Robbin was in fine form, and her magnificent voice was supple and expressive.

Lamoreaux, in her aria "Jesu, deine Gnadenblikke," projected an admirable ease and simplicity in her role, while Nomura was one of the delightful surprises of the evening, for his is a wonderful voice, rich and sonorous, and with a range of expression that won the audience over.

For the first time, patrons were hearing Sunset Theater in its Festival configuration, with the musicians brought further into the hall by removing the first three rows of seats and extending the stage forward. This is a very successful experiment and the results as heard from the rear of the hall were spectacular.

The Opening Night Concert repeats at 8 p.m. this Saturday and on July 27.

■ 'Passion According to St. John'

By NATHALIE PLOTKIN
Peninsula Music Critic

THE PASSION According to St. John took its turn this year as the major endeavor of the Carmel Bach Festival. Filling the stage with the total musical resources gathered for the Festival under the direction of Maestro Bruno Weil, it was a memorable event.

A new thrust stage made this musical achievement even easier to appreciate. Conceived and constructed by Festival technical director Ross Brown and his crew, it brought the performers out from under the arch and into closer audio and visual contact with the audience.

The acoustical improvement was exciting and satisfying. There was greater vibrancy, depth, resonance and tonal balance apparent in the instrumental and vocal sound. We can only hope this change will be permanently incorporated into the structure of the auditorium.

Weil made a seamless entity of a work that could easily seem disjointed and unfocused. He put together a concentrated, clearly defined and well integrated overview of the particular passion scenario as conceived by St. John's Gospel. Except for the awkward and abrupt ending of Part One, everything flowed with an inexorable sense of continuity and dramatic intensity.

Soloists commended

As the Evangelist who related the story "according to St. John," tenor David Gordon once again scored a highly sensitive and refined triumph. His musicality and his understanding projection of an enormous and emotionally taxing role bound the entire undertaking together.

Baritone David Newman in the lovely cameo role of Jesus also scored a personal triumph. I would like to hear him in the "St. Matthew Passion" scheduled for next year.

The soloists singing the arias interspersed throughout the work as commentaries on the story were all highly impressive. Soprano Rosa Lamoreaux, who always projects an illuminatory tone, sounds especially lovely when singing with a flute obbligato.

Mezzo-soprano Catherine Robbin's projection of warmth and tenderness, whether singing with two oboes or with John Dornenburg's superb viola da gamba accompaniment in the Passion's most memorable aria, "Es ist vollbracht," was treasurable.

Tenor Benjamin Butterfield sounded heroic in a jagged vocal line and then soul searching as the text altered its mood. His is a new Festival voice I'd like to hear again.

Another newcomer, baritone Christopheren Nomura, is quite a vocal find. He is young but vibrantly impressive. His singing is mature, large-toned and technically secure.

Nonetheless, it is the combined Carmel Bach Festival Chorus and Chorale that are the backbone of the work. It was an inspired idea to mingle the two groups because it strengthened and solidified the many colorfully varied storytelling crowd scenes and congregational-style chorales. They sang with great feeling and understanding, with credit going to choral director Bruce Lamott.

As always, the many aria accompaniments and the afternoon long continuo support were excellently realized by flutist Damian Bursill-Hall, oboist Bernhard Heinrichs, cellist Douglas McNames and organist Paul Nicholson.

This difficult and troublingly intense, thorny masterwork was accorded a full and sympathetic realization under Bruno Weil's guiding hand. It was a performance to be proud of.

'The Passion According to St. John' repeats at 2:30 p.m. this Sunday and on Sunday, July 28.

■ 'What's Up, Bach?' concert

By LYN BRONSON

THE CARMEL Bach Festival's Monday evening "What's Up, Bach?" concert turned out to be "an evening at the Improv."

We didn't have a brick wall as a background, but we did have two stand-up comedians: scholar/musician John Butt and tenor David Gordon, both of whom led the audience through an evening of fun and wit (with serious undertones) as they gave us important insights into the music of Johann Sebastian Bach.

FESTIVAL TICKETS, INFO: 624-1521
July 13 - Aug. 4

To keep us entertained, Butt and Gordon indulged in a comedy routine in which Butt told jokes about tenors, and tenor Gordon responded with jokes about musicologists.

The bantering got so raucous at times they began sounding like two of The Three Stooges. Although they didn't tweak each other's noses or hit each other on the head with rubber mallets, there was a pretty good Moe and Curly schtick going on throughout the evening.

Along the way we heard two works by Heinrich Schütz, Ich liege und schlafe and Siehe mein Fursprecher, and selections from Bach's cantata Christ lag in Todesbanden, the St. John Passion and the Brandenburg Concerto No. 2.

To provide the musical examples, soprano Rosa Lamoreaux, tenor Benjamin Butterfield and baritone Christopheren Nomura provided the vocal compliment.

From the Festival orchestra we had violinists Carla Moore and Leah Roseman, flutist Damian Bursill-Hall, Wolfgang Basch on Baroque trumpet, violist George Thomson, oboists Monica Johnson and Valerie DiCarlo, double bassist J. Warren long and Paul Nicholson doubling on harpsichord and organ.

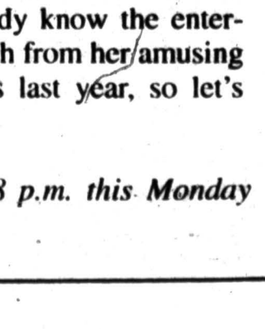
An educational experience

"What's Up, Bach?" was subtitled "An Illumination of the Marvels and Intentions of Bach's Music." Using the ancient discipline of rhetoric as a convenient outline for presenting a subject, Butt used as a starting point a photograph projected on a screen of an austere church in East Germany (since the church in Leipzig where many of Bach's works were presented was destroyed during World War II).

Since the word Baroque brings a picture to mind of vast, ornate, and highly decorated structures, the image of this plain, undecorated chapel made quite an impression. It was just a large room with altar, pulpit and organ loft.

To begin and end the evening, the musicians served up the first movement of the Brandenburg Concerto No. 2, which we had heard during the opening night concert (see review this page). It was interesting that the musicians performed it at a slightly slower tempo than during the opening concert, with vastly better effect.

A lot of the evening's discussion and musical examples centered around Bach's use of word painting, which both Butt and Gordon illustrated by using text projected on the screen as the musicians sang the selections.



John Butt

I don't know whether the concept of this presentation was influenced by the "multimedia" approach currently taking over the computer world, but it was certainly an important aspect of the presentation. At one point a laser pointer was even used to help us follow the critical points being discussed, but that was about as high tech as it got.

The two selections by Heinrich Schütz were used to demonstrate Schütz's innovations in setting music to German text, and how Bach, while influenced by this great musician, developed the art to an extraordinary degree. The selections from Christ lag in Todesbanden and the St. John Passion were suitably dramatic and beautifully performed.

The vocal soloists during the evening provided some lovely singing, especially tenor Benjamin Butterfield and baritone Christopheren Nomura, who carried the major burden during the vocal demonstrations.

I don't know whether the future of the Festival holds more "evenings at the Improv," but it's a good concept. I hope we will hear some of the Festival's other talented musicians in similar roles. We already know the entertainment talents of Elizabeth Wallfisch from her amusing readings of Charles Birney's diaries last year, so let's have more.

'What's Up, Bach?' repeats at 8 p.m. this Monday and on Monday, July 29.

Home values on the rise? Keep it to yourself

■ It's again chic to talk about what your house is worth, but here are 10 reasons why it's best to bite your tongue.

THE UP AND down California real estate market is on the rise again, and as usual it can make people crazy.

Already, local television reports and newspaper accounts are beginning to create a fervor with stories about a "hot" real estate market. "My-house-is-worth" chit-chat is again popular at cocktail parties.

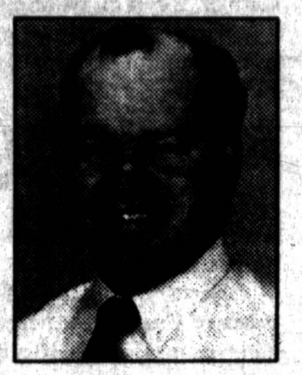
As the real estate market improves in many parts of the state, anxious homeowners are beginning to turn the discussion to how much their neighbor's house sold for. Salty debates about religion, literature and politics give way to conversations that are peppered with, "$300,000? Wow," and "Five offers over asking price, can you believe it?"

Going wild

Well it's time to stop all of this nonsense before prices really go wild.

Here are 10 reasons why it is unwise to go around talking about how the value of your home is on the rise.

1. Renter backlash. Be aware that when talking about your home price appreciation in a room full of people, the odds are good that you are making many of them uncomfortable and jealous — 50 percent of the households in California are renters. And half of the homeowners got hit hard by deflation in the early 1990s and may not realize that inflation is back.



California Trends

By Bradley Inman

2. Painful reminder. Be careful bringing up your homeowner fortunes in front of your secretary, a school teacher or the local police officer. Many middle-income families can't afford to buy a home in California and don't need to be reminded of that unfortunate fact.

3. Fluctuating prices. Home price appreciation may lead you to believe that you are smarter than you are. Because your house inflated 5 percent in the first six months of this year, you conclude that you must be bright; at least that's what your dad from Peoria tells you. Of course, he lives in a place where prices never go up or down and he doesn't understand that every 10 years or so, the state has a dramatic run up in home prices.

4. Paper profits. Much like the stock market, they aren't worth much until you sell. But unlike Wall Street, there is a hefty charge for cashing out, like the interest and points you will pay to refinance the debt. Plus, don't forget capital gains if you decide to sell and use your profits to buy a boat.

5. Politics as usual. All of this home-price chatter is great fodder for political redistributionists. When a whole bunch of people begin boasting about their obscene profits, the progressive non-homeowner crowd will want to take some of it away from you. For example, watch the U.S. Congress eyeball the mortgage interest deduction when the deficit worsens and news about windfall real estate profits hit the headlines.

6. Domino effect. There are some economic costs that you should consider. When your home prices go up, the entire social strata of your neighborhood is elevated. Even if you can't afford it, this puts pressure on you to buy new furniture, hire a gardener, put in better landscaping and purchase a new car. Then there's the higher car and house insurance premiums, and shops start moving into the neighborhood with merchandise you can't afford.

California Trends

By Bradley Inman

7. Out of work. Don't forget, there is a way to lose your job in this scenario. If prices continue to climb, young skilled workers won't be able to afford to live here, companies will move out and the economy will go to the dogs again. You'll be out of a job with nobody left here to buy your over-priced house. Then the values will collapse and it will all seem like a dream.

8. Sobering news. While real estate types are determined to convince you otherwise, there is certain to be a market correction. The last surge in home prices in the late 1980s only lasted 18 months and was followed by a steep downturn. Many homeowners are still in shell shock from that property depression.

While real estate types are determined to convince you otherwise, there is certain to be a market correction. The last surge in home prices in the late 1980s only lasted 18 months and was followed by a steep downturn.

9. Big backlash. If despite all of this advice, you still can't contain yourself, then talk about your equity gains with a little tact. Don't exaggerate by more than 5 percent. Don't mention it more than once a week to the same person. And never bring it up in front of your children: they will assume you are worth more than you are and use it against you someday.

10. Happy days. Finally, don't forget to enjoy your home; be quiet and have some quality time with your new found gold mine.

Mortgage Update

Diana Pintar

Swinging With A "Two Step"

Are you looking for a way to save money on your home mortgage? Why not try a "two-step"!

A "two-step" loan is essentially a 30 year mortgage which has been divided into two periods. The most common two-step loans are the 5-25 and 7-23. The interest rate and monthly payments are fixed for the first 5 or 7 years, then adjust to prevailing rates for the remainder period, as opposed to a "balloon" which is absolutely due and payable at the end of the initial term.

Recent increases in the interest rate for the traditional 30 year fixed rate loans have made the "two-step" mortgages potential money savers. This is because the initial rate is generally lower than the 30 year fixed rate.

The 5-25 and the 7-23 loans gamble on a favorable 5 or 7 year rate adjustments and are particularly attractive to those who intend to be in their homes for less than that period.

This is just one more way that we can assist borrowers to make good decisions when it comes to choosing a home mortgage!

Out in the garden: Tulips now grown year-round in state

IF YOU yearn to "Tiptoe Through the Tulips," but don't want to wait for their traditional springtime arrival — the California Cut Flower Commission has some good news for you: Tulips are now grown year-round in California.

The commission advises that:

■ When buying California tulips, you can get the best value during the Lenten period, when supply is good and demand is less than usual.

■ Select flowers with tight buds. The tighter the bud, the longer the flower will last.

■ Display them in a cool location. Warmth will shorten their life.

THE TITLE SEARCH

People who do title searches don't have what is considered the most exciting job in the real estate field, but their job is an extremely important one.

If your seller has had financial difficulties, for instance, and didn't pay their bills, there may be judgements that must be satisfied when the property is sold. And someone in addition to the people who signed the sales agreement may have a partial interest in the property. If parents have cosigned the mortgage for your sellers, for example, they will need to sign the sales agreement and the deed that transfers ownership to you. In addition to looking at the current owners' situation, they go back many years, examining what is called the "chain of title," and they will send the results to the settlement office. If you learn that the property you are buying has title problems, don't panic. Most of them are resolved easily and in plenty of time to avoid settlement delays.

Bob Bussinger and Wendy Brodie were on hand to greet Svend Lilleby from Norway and Vaclav Novotny from Poland at a dinner at the Seaside home of Don and Jackie Craghead.

Cragheads open home to foreign officers

Social Spotlight

By Dodie Barkley

WHENEVER I spend time with Don and Jackie Craghead I'm reminded of Shakespeare's line, "We are such stuff as dreams are made on."

This incredible couple, as official Naval Postgraduate School (NPGS) hosts, held a dinner on Wednesday, July 3 at their Seaside digs for 60 people, including ministers, ambassadors and high-ranking military officers from 14 countries who are attending a four-week financial management course at NPGS.

Talking to diplomats is intriguing because they are always politically-oriented. A simple question, "How do you like Monterey?" was given an ambiguous answer: "I would rather answer that question when I am in my own country." "What language is spoken in your country?" was answered, "That depends upon whom I'm speaking to, how many people are in the room and on what subject."

It was easy to see that even after an extensive series of interviews, simple answers would still not be available. Shades of Che Guevara with 007 James Bond in hot pursuit were prevalent!

Rumanians, Antiguans, Norwegians and people from Sri Lanka, Poland and Czechoslovakia mixed well with a large group of Monterey area socialites like Tom and Camilla May, novelist Shelby Steele and his wife Rita, Bob Bussinger and Wendy Brodie, Morley Brown and Ron Weitzman, Bob and Rita Hunsicker, Glori Evert and Ruthie Watts.

Always in the background were the Cragheads, serving people and seeing that everyone was made to feel at home. It is easy to see why no one ever turns down their invitations.

■ Ron Weitzman commemorated in county annals

Monterey County Supervisor Sam Karas presented a resolution appreciating and honoring Carmelite Ron Weitzman for his many contributions to the community on Tuesday, July 9 at the offices of the Board of Supervisors in Salinas.

Karas commended Weitzman for his community leadership and particularly for bringing outstanding musical programs to the county through the Monterey Bay Symphony. He added that Weitzman served on many boards for the last 25 years, and is the originator and producer of the Monterey Bay Symphony's July 4 concerts at the Naval Postgraduate School (NPGS).

"He's a great guy. When money was needed, Ron just went out and got it," Karas added as he handed Weitzman a huge plaque.

Board of Supervisors Chair Edith Johnsen told Weitzman that he is now memorialized in the county annals.

Weitzman is currently a board member of nine charitable organizations, including the American Red Cross, Alliance on Aging, State Theater Preservation Group and The Salvation Army.

Every year he, as president of the Monterey Bay Symphony, presents three concerts on the lawn at NPGS. More than 4,000 people attended the most recent one, held Sunday, July 7 — the largest crowd yet.

Weitzman, born in Chicago, holds bachelor's and master's degrees from Stanford University and a Ph.D. from Princeton. Since 1971 he has been a teacher at NPGS and is currently the faculty secretary.

Ron's great personal charm lies in his modesty and humble attitude toward life. He knows, like most people who have earned and attained a doctorate, that the more you know, the more there is to know.

■ Cannery Row in 3-D

John Harris, founder of Cannery Row's 812 Cinema and co-founder of the Dream Theater, flicked on the motion picture and slide projector Friday, July 12 and took us back to the 1960s when flames a half-mile high devoured the sardine factories — Monterey's largest industry.

The unique little theater within a wine-tasting business called A Taste of Monterey, in its location at 700 Cannery Row, is almost at the center of where the firestorms took place in 1969, shortly after Harris arrived on the Peninsula.

His three-dimensional photos showed relics and ruins of the fires in vivid colors. Each person viewing the exhibit was furnished with special 3-D glasses, bringing him into virtual reality. The most striking photo was of a woman kicking her heels back at the camera — you could almost feel the heel of her foot on your nose.

On hand to view the 15-minute presentation were Taste of Monterey managers Ken and Robyn Rauh, along with invited guests like Cannery Row Foundation President Neal Hotelling and his wife Bettina, husband and wife Susan Collins and Brad Mallory of three spirits gallery in Sand City, and Terri DeBono.

This is the first in a series of special presentations at the Cannery Row venue, with other productions slated for viewing at a later date.

This free showing can be viewed on the hour and half hour between 1 and 6 p.m. Friday through Sunday at A Taste of Monterey. For more information, call Harris at 646-5446.

■ New Monterey hosts first-ever summer festival

The lawn of Scholze Park on Lighthouse Avenue in New Monterey was the site of the New Monterey Business Association's (NMBA) first-ever summer festival on Saturday, July 13.

Attendees enjoyed a beautiful sunlit sky over a festive array of arts and craft tents that housed various foods, pottery, jewelry and vintage toys. The children met "Ravioli" the clown (Kerry Hartjen), who gave each child a colorful balloon. Guitarist Steve Goodman also performed.

Food booths served Mexican, Greek, Brazilian and German fare, and the Carmel Valley Coffee Company offered a variety of flavored brews.

The highlight of the summer festival, which went on through Sunday, was the watermelon-eating contest. Adults and children alike munched large pieces of melon down to the very rind to vie for valuable prizes.

John Clement of San Francisco gave a boomerang demonstration that awed many onlookers.

Kathi DeMaria, NMBA president, told the audience that this will be the first of such events to help promote business in New Monterey.

■ Back to Bock: a fun-filled bacchanal

Sunday's Back to Bock celebration held at the lower shopping center of Carmel Plaza was a gastronomical event of monumental proportions. Carmel Bach Festival fans partook of barbecued beef Stroganoff, buns filled with hot and mild bratwurst sausage, chicken and beef shish kebabs, every conceivable type of vegetable piled high with crab, cheese and other dips; huge pretzels and a refreshment bar serving Billy Goat Bock Beer.

A myriad of people turned out to enjoy German food, beer and music at the Back to Bock party at Carmel Plaza.

The Thirsty-Nine oompah band provided musical entertainment for partygoers at the Back to Bock kickoff party for the Carmel Bach Festival. The party was held on the lower level of Carmel Plaza on Sunday, July 14.

The Watsonville Thirsty Nine band (there's actually 14 members), dressed in Bavarian garb, serenaded the burgeoning crowd with oomp-pah-pahs, foot-stomping and other German styles of music.

Raffle prizes included four guest badges for the Pebble Beach Concours d'Elegance, a cocktail party for 24, shopping sprees, kayaking on Monterey Bay, a stay for two at The Inn at Spanish Bay, and surprise baskets from Saks Fifth Avenue.

There were many familiar faces enjoying the festivities. Among them were Carmel Mayor Ken White and his wife Jean, Paul and Emily Woudenberg, Willet and Irene Asling, Davis Factor, Laura Schimmel, Lee and Artie Early and Diana Tiernan.

The feeding and drinking frenzy, the overall color, the delicious aromas coming from the busy grill of Bird of Paradise Catering, and the colorful courtyard flowers arranged by Rob Reinkins of Flowers, Ltd. added up to a sensational sendoff for what is in store for the next three weeks while the Carmel Bach Festival reigns.

Free 'Stadtpfeiffer' concerts revive town piper tradition

By MARGOT PETTIT NICHOLS

City budgets were generous to the arts in Germany during the 14th to 18th centuries: City councils routinely employed musicians to serenade citizens with music especially composed for daily concerts.

J.S. Bach must have heard many such ensemble performances in Leipzig, as it was the center for these musicales, which were referred to as "Stadtpfeiffer" (town piper) music. Apparently this humanistic practice flourished in many cities and towns throughout Germany for almost four centuries.

The free Tower Music preconcert brass ensemble performances are now called "Stadtpfeiffer."

Carmel Bach Festival aficionados have enjoyed such alfresco music annually at the free Tower Music preconcert brass ensemble performances, which will be known henceforth as"Stadtpfeiffer," according to festival officials.

Carl Christensen, former principal trombonist of the Mexico City Philharmonic, has organized a group of two trumpets and two trombones to perform at the Stadtpfeiffer free programs – before the Bach Festival evening concerts at Sunset Theater – on the upper terrace on Saturdays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays at 7:30 p.m., and at 2 p.m. on Sundays.; and on Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m. at the Basilica bell tower – before the Carmel Mission Candlelight Concerts.

The Basilica bell tower Stadtpfeiffer performances begin just before sunset in the mission patio, with the musicians hidden from view atop the bougainvillea-covered bell tower.

Stadtpfeiffer music will be performed also at the children's concerts, and at noon on Fridays at Carmel Plaza, which sponsors this midday serenade.

The Stadtpfeiffer program is funded partially by Geri Stewart in memory of her husband, Lynn Gordon Stewart, who was a trombonist with the Festival for 25 years. ✥

Music Director Bruno Weil will conduct Johann Sebastian Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. 2" as the opening of the 1996 Carmel Bach Festival, presented July 13 to Aug. 4.

Why open with the Second Brandenburg?

Why not? It's like a champagne toast to start the Festival

By NATHALIE PLOTKIN

Trends and traditions are always interesting to keep track of in an edifice as imposing as the Carmel Bach Festival. Bruno Weil, as he continues to shape and mold his stewardship of the living elements of the event, has very subtly turned the opening music of the opening night into a celebration for his orchestra.

This year, each Saturday night (now the beginning of the week's musical rotation) will spotlight the Bach "Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in F" BWV 1047. As a historical footnote, the "Brandenburg Concertos" gave undeserved rich immortality to the name of Christian Ludwig, Margrave of Brandenburg . By accepting a commission from him and dedicating the works to the Margrave who was a collector of concerto music, Bach made him memorable in the annals of music. In 1721 Bach carefully prepared and sent to the Margrave six of his finest concerti grossi.

The Margrave, on the other hand, either thought so little of the works or more likely, didn't have the resources to have them performed that he didn't list them in the catalog of his collection. Also there are even doubts as to whether these splendid works were ever acknowledged or paid for.

The contents of the concertos make for a fascinating study. Bach took advantage of the commission to make it into a treatise on the concerto grosso form. He explored its potential in an all-but-scientific manner. Each concerto is for a different orchestration and calls for differing numbers of skilled musicians. They can also be considered as an encyclopedia on instrumental usage and performance practice as understood in early 18th century Germany.

The Second Concerto is one of the sprightliest and most joyful of the six works in the set. The format here is of a concertino of four solo instruments shining against an accompanying group (ripieno). It has unusual instrumental colors created by the use of four different high pitched instruments with the trumpet being utilized to provide brilliant decorations of the main theme. Principally the concertino calls for an outstandingly virtuosic practitioner of the art of playing the brilliant "piccolo" trumpet and in Wolfgang Basch, a veteran Festival participant, this part will assuredly be in safe hands. There are also brilliant parts for the violin, oboe and flute soloists.

The opening Allegro sparkles with fanfare-like refrains and many charming episodes. The interplay of the soloists is delightful. The lovely Andante is tender and melancholy. Here the trumpet is silent and violin, flute and oboe, plus the continuo accompaniment, have a true chamber sound.

The brilliant Finale is an exuberant dancing fugue. This combination sounds impossible, but isn't. A festive trumpet announcement starts the happy activity and gives rise to subsequent virtuoso fireworks from all the participants who gallop off to a merry ending.

All in all, a very happy way to start the week's music making. ✣

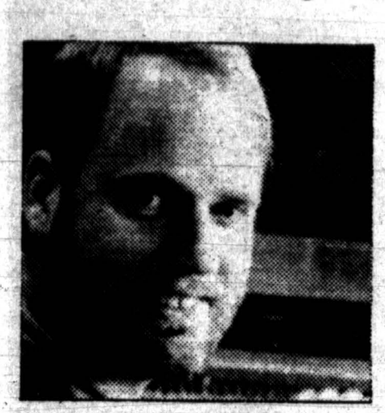
Popular series salute Bach's best; explore how he achieved effects

By SUE BARTON

To quote Nana Faridany, Carmel Bach Festival executive director, "Monday nights are the orchestra's nights off and in the past have been the occasion of a piano recital. This year Bruno Weil wanted to do something new: a concert with conversation, informative but light, along the lines of the famous Leonard Bernstein expositions."



JOHN BUTT, Organist

It fell to organ soloist and lecturer John Butt to write the script for "What's Up, Bach?" which he will helm in tandem with David Gordon, solo tenor and director of the Virginia Best Adams Vocal Master Class.

"Butt is a major Bach scholar," says Faridany, "but that doesn't mean that this will be a dry, intellectualized event. He was the organ scholar at Cambridge and his humor is very British in the irreverent tradition of John Cleese. The script is so clever and charming, the presentation will be tremendous fun for everybody."

Bruno Weil has done this sort of thing before in Germany but according to Faridany, he needs a night off as much as the orchestra does. Thus, Butt and Gordon are accompanied by various major soloists who will sing and play examples of the pieces under discussion.

The event will concentrate on how Bach "works," how he achieved his kinetic effects. The focus will be on the 18th century, a time in which there was no such thing as a piano – "Too big, too resonant, too splashy," says Faridany – only the delicate harpsichord.

The last Saturday of the Festival is devoted to a favorite event, "The Best of the Fest." Faridany says that Weil, with assistant conductor Bruce Lamott, introduced this component to the program three years ago.

"It is very popular. People come to it who don't come to any of the other concerts. However, it often acts as an introduction which leads to their attending more events the following year.

"Ballots are collected from audiences during the preceding performances," says Faridany. "Bruno then chooses the favorites and the evening consists of excerpts from these accompanied by narration. He's very funny and of course the music is wonderful so this is an extremely entertaining close to the Festival."

The "What's Up, Bach?" programs will take place on Mondays, July 15, 22 and 29. "The "Best of the Fest" is offered once only: 8 p.m. Saturday, Aug 3. ✣

WEIL SEEKS TO REVIVE 'UNDERRATED' HAYDN

By BETH PENNEY

The whimsically named "Haydn-Seeking: An Evening in Vienna" program planned for Tuesday nights at this year's Carmel Bach Festival has a lot more than just whimsy behind it.

Festival Conductor and Music Director Bruno Weil hopes the program will encourage people to seek out more of Franz Joseph Haydn's work.

> 'Doing the Bach Festival in Carmel is the greatest time I have had in my life.' – BRUNO WEIL

The 18th century composer, who according to critics is actually one of the main figures in the development of symphonies, sonatas and string quartets, has not shared the popularity enjoyed by certain other composers, including his contemporary, Mozart. The reason, Weil maintains, is because Haydn is misunderstood.

"Haydn is one of the greatest composers of all time," Weil said. "But he is totally underrated. Most of his masterpieces are unknown."

There is a definite connection between the works of Bach and those of Haydn.

"Both Haydn and Mozart became so great because they integrated Bach's music into their own," Weil said.

When Bach was introduced in Vienna by an ambassador from Berlin, Haydn and Mozart were both at the first performance, "and that changed their lives," Weil said. "That's why the classical style came to a summit. It was a mixture of the three styles."Haydn, however, has suffered from a prejudice that his work is heavy and stuffy. What Weil hopes to do by working with Haydn's music, and presenting Haydn in Carmel, is, he said, "get Haydn away from the role and the prejudice.

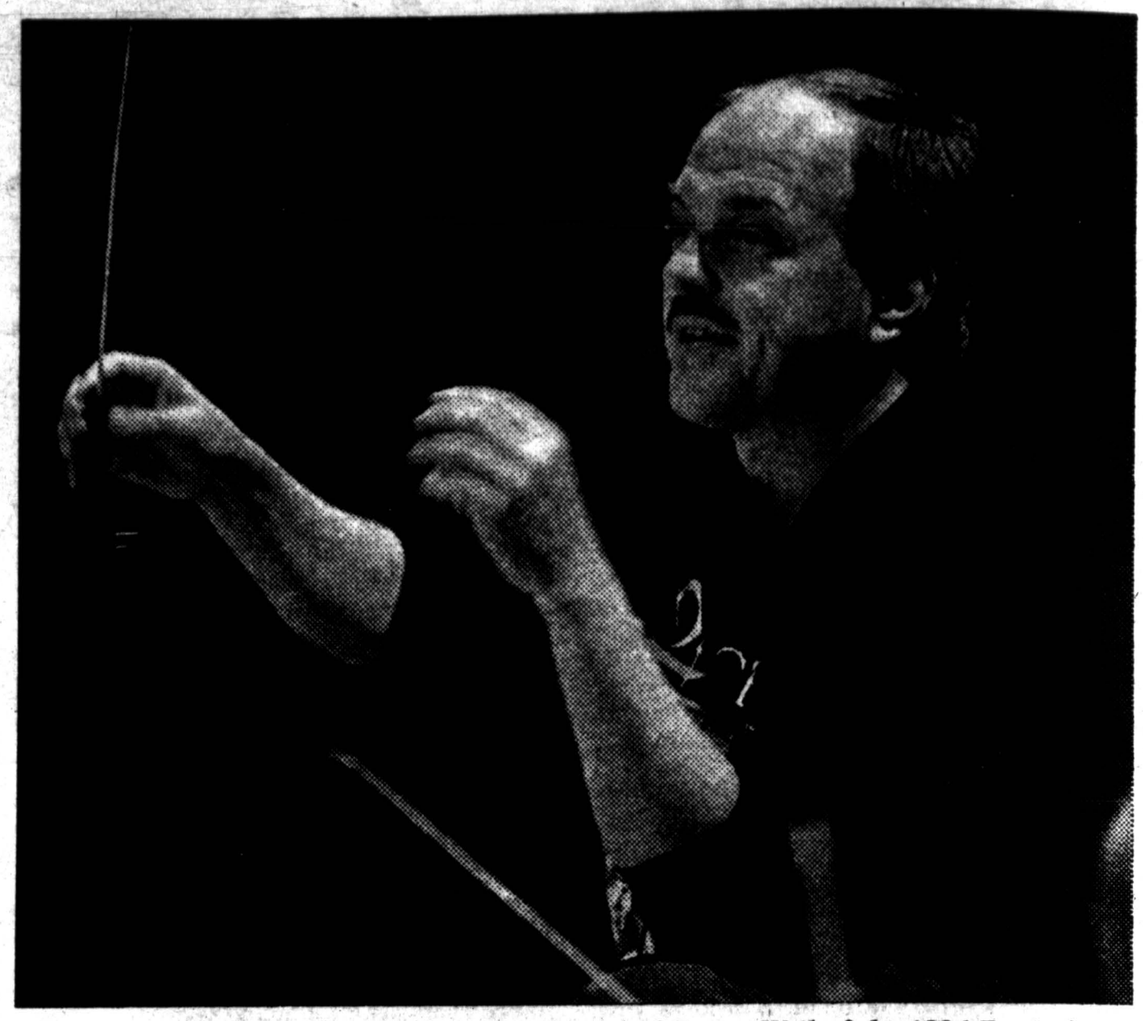
"People think masses should be heavy," Weil added. But what he will present on Tuesday evenings during this Festival is "the young and lively Haydn, the real Haydn, not the 'Papa Haydn' that everyone thinks of."

The Nelson Mass is actually "very happy," Weil said. "But that's why it's misunderstood. Haydn has a sense of humor in his music and his attitude toward life."

When Weil took the position as conductor and music director of the Carmel event in 1992, he started a campaign to include the works of Haydn in the Festival's offerings.

The presentation of the Missa in angustiis, or Nelson Mass, on Tuesday evenings this summer is part of a series of six Haydn masses that Weil is presenting, in chronological order, each year, starting with the Heiligemesse in 1994 and continuing last year with the Paukenemesse. Also on the "Haydn-Seeking" program are the Symphony No. 46 in B Major and the Sinfonia Concertante in B Flat (see sidebar).

Weil has been called "the world's leading interpreter" of Haydn's symphonies, and in January of this year he accepted the 1996 Cannes Classical Award for the Best Orchestral Recording, 17th and 18th Century. That award was made for his CD of Haydn's "Paris" Symphonies. Said Weil modestly of the acclaim, "You get a reward for the best Haydn recording in the world, well, that's up to other people to judge."



"I want to make Haydn a successful composer," said Bruno Weil of the 1996 Festival programming. "So I just jumped through the barriers."

Weil currently has 22 recordings in release on the Sony Classical label, including many Haydn symphonies. In September, he will record Haydn's Nelson Mass, his Theresa Mass, and Beethoven's Piano Concertos with the Toelz Boys' Choir.

Weil, who lives in Germany, is a protege of Herbert von Karajan. He has conducted many other orchestras, including the Vienna Philharmonic, the Vienna Symphony, the Berlin Philharmonic, the NHK Orchestra Tokyo, the Sydney Symphony, L'Orchestre National de France, L'Orchestre Symphonique du Montreal, the Los Angeles Philharmonic and Toronto's Tafelmusik.

He has also led other major international music festivals and opera companies, including the Vienna Opera. But he said

'Bach to the Future' concert series designed for young ears

By LYN BRONSON

The Carmel Bach Festival has had a long tradition of educational outreach programs that take live music presentations to elementary schools on the Monterey Peninsula. For the past five years Dr. Bruce Lamott, who wears a lot of hats – he is director of the Festival Chorale, and conductor of the Mission Basilica concerts – has also directed the children's concerts which are called "Bach to the Future."

BRUCE LAMOTT

These concerts are partially funded by generous donations from the AT & T Pro Am, the Pebble Beach Foundation, the Cultural Council of the Monterey Peninsula, the Community Foundation of Monterey County and the Dunspaugh-Dalton Foundation. In addition, this year for the first time, they received a substantial donation from a new donor, the Mozart Society of California.

According to Lamott, "the Bach to the Future concerts are lots of fun, and the children really enjoy them." To make an effective presentation, the Festival sends a small group from the orchestra and members of the chorale to area schools. This year one of the concerts will take place on July 25 at Natividad Elementary School, and the other will be offered Aug. 1 at Manzanita Elementary School. A third children's concert and petting zoo will be at Sunset Center on Thursday, July 25 at 12:30 p.m. All three of these children's concerts are free.

Since this year's program concentrates on the Bach Family, Bruce Lamott will be telling the audience what it is like to grow up in a musical household with lots of kids. There will be a special focus on Bach's musical sons: Christian (the youngest) and Friedemann (the eldest), C.P.E. Bach and then Johann Christoph Friedrich who often gets short shrift amidst his more illustrious brothers.

"We try to involve the kids in some audience participation such as clapping and singing. We also introduce them to the instrumental families and how the various parts of the orchestra work, and particularly how music in the Baroque era is built from the bottom up."

One of the featured pieces in this series of concerts is a set of 18 keyboard variations for harpsichord by J.C.F. Bach on the famous 18th century tune "Ah, vous diraije. Maman," better known to us today as "Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star." Mozart also wrote a famous set of variations on the same theme. Although the J.C.F. Bach variations are quite a novelty, because of the familiar theme they will be easy for the children to relate to. Thomas Annand, a young harpsichordist and organist from Ottawa, will be bringing a small, Italian harpsichord

Here's why there are Italian concertos in a Bach Festival

By NATHALIE PLOTKIN

A happy combination of circumstances makes it possible for Festival audiences to experience some of the music that influenced the creative genius of the young Johann Sebastian Bach as he developed and matured. Inspired programming and the musically and technically sophisticated performance abilities of violinist Elizabeth Wallfisch are joined together for this purpose.

Between 1717 and 1723 Bach was the Kapellmeister and director of chamber music at the court of Prince Leopold of Anhalt in Kothen. During these years he produced a rich outpouring of instrumental music which included a wealth of sonatas and concertos. In the same period Bach is also known to have studied and transcribed much of the Italian concerto literature as it circulated through Europe. The result of his attention to this literature is easily appreciated. Vivaldi in particular, was a tremendous influence and is like a silk thread running through Bach's sturdy Germanic musical fabric.

The Italian violin-virtuoso/composers in the early 18th century flourished mainly in Rome and Venice and these are the places where the two composers most important in this genre, Corelli and Vivaldi, were active. Whether by teaching or example in the works of immediate or later disciples and imitators, they had a pervasive influence on the writing of great composers in other countries – not only Bach, but Handel, Telemann and later Locatelli, as well. The two Italians were prime forces in the musical events that surrounded and succeeded them.

Corelli was the earliest of the great Italian concerto composers. Though not the most prolific writer (rare in those days) his set of 12 concertos of his Opus 6 were remarkable in that they were kept in print and circulated as classics even after the death of the composer. This was a highly unusual situation since the custom of the times was to always look for the latest and freshest works.

On the other hand, Vivaldi was internationally acclaimed in his lifetime, then literally forgotten. When he was later spoken of, unflattering references were made to the sheer number of concertos he wrote (more than 400 for a variety of instruments are still extant). Still the grace, melodiousness and technical advances he made in the art of instrumental performance must not be overlooked. Vivaldi poured out a torrent of music that still sounds fresh and delights the ear.

Elizabeth Wallfisch, Festival concertmaster, will lead "More Spectacular Italian Concertos" Thursday nights throughout the Carmel Bach Festival.

Handel, who is also included on the program, was a direct contemporary of Vivaldi, studied for a time in Italy and absorbed the musical values of Corelli.

Finally, Locatelli, only 10 years younger than Bach and Handel, seemed to have achieved a summation of the advances both technically and musically of his predecessors. His music is the most demanding of the composers of the era. He was a true violin virtuoso who eschewed the restraint of Corelli, had more up-to-date pyrotechnics than Vivaldi and was more determined to shine as a soloist than Handel chose to require of his performers.

Last year Elizabeth Wallfisch amply demonstrated these attributes with consummate ease, surmounting the stringent demands Locatelli put into his music. I have no doubt whatsoever that she will do so again. ✣ to the concerts and will be playing the J.C.F. Bach Variations.

Also on the program will an overture by J. C. Bach, a work which they are excerpting from the "Bach's Tops" program – in fact, several things on the children's programs will be culled from "Bach's Tops," but with more explanation and more verbal interaction. Also on the program this year will be Mary Ellen Callahan and Donald Wilkinson singing part of Bach's "Peasant Cantata."

A popular feature of the children's concerts is what is called an "instrument petting zoo" following the concert where the children can come up and handle a variety of "loaner" instruments borrowed from Youth Music Monterey or people who have been regularly supporting the festival. It is a wonderful opportunity for children to handle instruments and learn what is involved in making a sound on them.

Bruce Lamott says, "I have my own 'five year plan' for educational activities connected with the Carmel Bach Festival." He would like to see a closer relationship with the California Summer Music Program, which is the San Francisco Conservatory's summer music program which is being held this year for the first time at the Robert Louis Stevenson School in Pebble Beach. There are some extraordinary musical activities going on there, and it obviously will grow each year. Bruce would also like to see a Junior Bach Festival here during the summer modeled after the very successful Junior Bach Festival in Berkeley.

Who knows? Perhaps some day in its educational activities, our festival here may rival the Aspen Festival. If Bruce Lamott has anything to do with it, you can count on it. ✣

'Passion According to St. John' makes use of sterling soloists

By NATHALIE PLOTKIN

Once again as the traditional Sunday afternoon climax of the Carmel Bach Festival, it is the turn of Johann Sebastian Bach's emotionally charged and colorfully dramatic setting of the "Passion According to St. John" BWV 245.

Bach composed three majestic vocal works which have become the backbone of the Festival program. Each one of these works, the Passions according to St. Matthew and St. John and the B Minor Mass, bring together all of the resources assembled for the Festival and is the major effort as they have been offered in an almost inexorable yearly rotation. Last year, however, Maestro Weil introduced the Christmas Oratorio as a new entrant to the cycle.

Still it makes little difference whether the work under consideration is this one or one of the others. The result is almost always an immersion in an absorbing and encompassing music drama which, as it moves to its known and inexorable conclusion, becomes absorbing and mesmeric in atmosphere, capturing emotions and mind, but, leaving in the case of the "Passion According to St. John" a disturbing, disquieting after-effect because of his own very harsh interpretation of the events.

This Gospel is precisely centered on the Passion Story, beginning immediately with the arrest of Jesus and proceeding in an exciting and continuous fashion, with few points of repose for the composer or the audience. There is little time to reflect or comment on the events in the usual and accepted oratorio style.

Bach, therefore, made additions to the text. Using St. John XVIII and XIX as a base, he interpolated such scenes as the rending of the veil of the temple and Peter's remorse from St. Matthew. Bach wrote some of the text himself and used 14 chorales which soften the jagged outlines of this Gospel.

As a result, the chorus carries the main musical burden. It fills many roles, often as a purposeful, venomous mob of great intensity, but also, as in the chorales, reflective and understanding. They act as informed participators in the drama.

The story is told by the Evangelist who carries the full weight of narrating the events. With informed sensitivity he must illuminate the happenings as they occur. The Passion begins with the chorus on a note of bitter lamentation. The Evangelist then goes on to tell the story of how Christ was betrayed in the garden, how Peter drew his sword and smote a servant of the high priest, and how Christ is led away.

Part II relates the trial before Pilate, resulting in many highly dramatic and emotional outbursts. Part III sums up the death of Jesus with one of the greatest of all oratorio arias: "Es ist vollbracht".

This year's presentation will employ a sterling set of vocalists and instrumentalists. Festival audiences have been able to enjoy the artistry of tenor David Gordon, a foremost interpreter of Bach's Evangelist music for many years now. He is always an outstanding protagonist of this demanding role.

Joining Gordon are Festival favorites soprano Rosa Lamoreaux and mezzo-soprano Catherine Robbin. Tenor Benjamin Butterfield, baritone Christopheren Nomura and bass David Newman round out the list of vocal soloists. There are many specialized instrumental accompanists with these skilled participants drawn from the ranks of the Festival orchestra.

Under the direction of Maestro Weil, the audience can undoubtedly expect a crisp, clear, yet intense detailing of the music. Lingering sentimentality is simply not in his approach no matter how reverently this work has been presented in the past.

His philosophy has been stated as letting the music speak for itself as he embraced what the original edition put forth. Happily though, he has been known to be flexible enough to soften up in the slower arias and I, personally, have appreciated his doing so. ✥

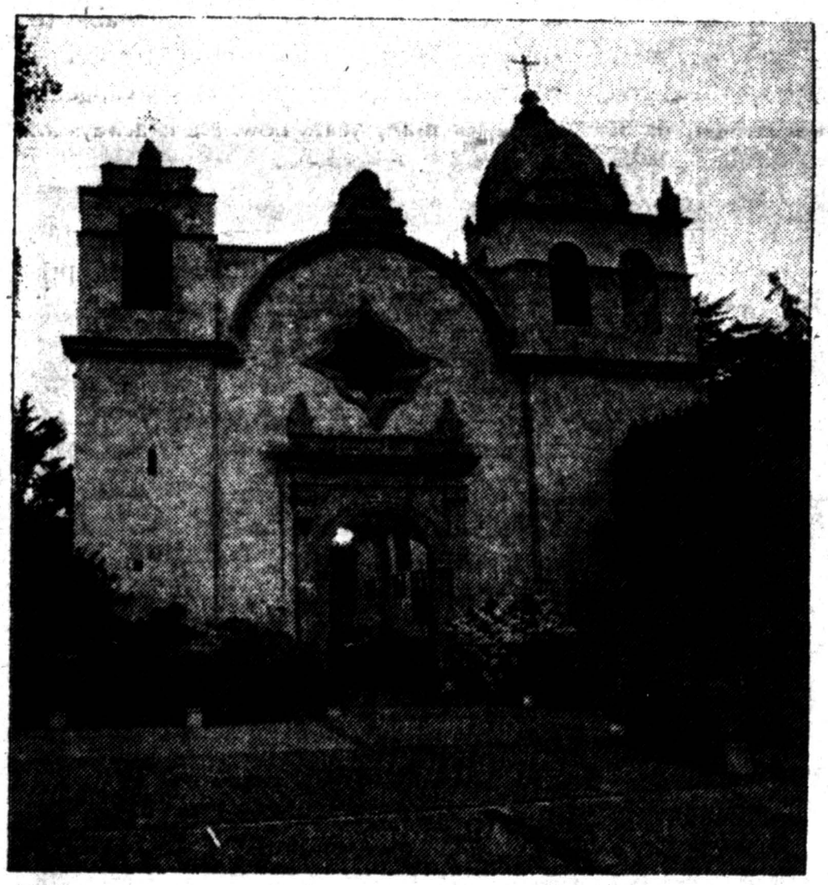
'Let Songs Resound' theme of four Founders' Memorial Concerts

By MARGOT PETTIT NICHOLS

The fluctuating light of luminaria along Carmel Mission Basilica garden pathways will direct concertgoers to the Founders' Memorial Concerts scheduled for three Wednesday performances, on July 17, 24, and 31 at 9 p.m., and one Sunday concert at 3 p.m. on Aug. 4.

"Let Songs Resound!" is the theme of these four candlelight Founders' concerts at which Conductor Bruce Lamott will lead the Festival Chorale and Orchestra in all-Bach performances.



Festival Executive Director Nana Faridany invites those who cannot obtain tickets to the Founders' Memorial Concert to listen to the concert from the Mission gardens, in which the Mission music is audible. There will also be a delayed broadcast on KUSP-FM 88.9 Wednesday, July 31 at 8:30 p.m.

In the hushed, darkened atmosphere of the Basilica, altar candles will be lighted by acolytes before the processional entrance of crimson-robed choir members – some bearing banners inspired by Leipzig, Weimar, Eisenach, Thuringia, Meissen and the Duchy of Saxony, and some carrying 3-foot candles or votives.

The sound of hand bells, reminiscent of Sanctus bells rung during the mass, will break the stillness, and the German plainsong, "Komm, heiliger Geist, Herre Gott" (Come, Holy Ghost, Lord God) will fill the Basilica as the much-anticipated Founders' Memorial Concert commences.

Included in the celebratory music will be Bach's Mass in G Major, BWV 236; Sinfonia to Cantata BWV 4, a treatment of the Matthew gospel's Parable of the Royal Wedding Feast; "Sing to the Lord" Motet BWV 225 (a motet being a sacred choral work with no specific liturgical function); Organ Toccata and Fugue in A Minor, BWV 543; and "Let Songs Resound!" Cantata BWV 172. The recessional includes the Chorale Finale from Cantata BWV 129 – "Praise be to the Lord my God"– and Te Deum Laudamus, a plainchant.

Featured singers are: Catherine McCord Larsen and Mary Ellen Callahan, sopranos; Foster Sommerlad, countertenor; Sean McDermott and Kim Childs, tenors; Donald Wilkinson, baritone; Linda Childs, alto; and Burr Cochran Phillips, bass. Thomas Annand is the featured organist.

Tickets to the concert are $50. Festival Executive Director Nana Faridany invites those who cannot obtain tickets to listen to the concert from the Mission gardens, in which the Mission music is audible.

The Founders' Memorial Concert is sponsored by Stahl Motor Company. There will be a delayed broadcast on KUSP-FM 88.9 Wednesday, July 31 at 8:30 p.m.

A four-course, preconcert Mission Dinner will commence at 6:30 p.m. each Wednesday of the Festival in Crespi Hall in back of the Basilica, at which Conductor Lamott will talk about the concert and programming.

Chef Jon Kasky, of Bird of Paradise Catering, Carmel Valley, will introduce an innovative menu created around an Early California theme. The featured entree will be jalapeno-glazed quail on a nest of cornbread stuffing with squaw relish. Dinner tickets are on sale for $45. ✥

1996 Festival tackles 'Olympian' theme

By NATHALIE PLOTKIN

On first confronting the title given to the Friday night concert "Olympic Bach and Heavenly Mozart," it is possible to grant Mozart heavenly status but well nigh impossible to imagine Bach as an athletic participant.

You have to admire the ingenuity of the Festival staff in seeking current events relationships that are clever and intriguing to potential audiences. It is eye-catching enough, but really tenuous unless the event categories are changed.

Perhaps, along these lines, there could be one for Baroque creativity or for writing hundreds of cantatas. Maybe one for variety of instrumental concertos, or another for amount and magnitude of organ compositions. Bach would have gotten the Gold in all such contests.

"Olympic Bach and Heavenly Mozart" is the title given the Carmel Bach Festival concerts at 8 p.m. Fridays: July 19, 26 and Aug. 2. These will feature the Festival Chorale and Orchestra and selected vocal soloists. For ticket information, call 624-2046.

But when the program itself is inspected more closely, what we have is a cantata about Olympians that is listed. It isn't about the games, but it is about the gods who, according to Greek myths, dwell on Mount Olympus.

"Aeolus Appeased" BWV 205 is one of the approximately 40 identified secular cantatas that Bach wrote in the course of his creative activities. Many of these have characters such as Phoebus, Pan, Diana, Pallas Athena, Hercules and Bellona, Goddess of War. These cantatas, written for special occasions including weddings, birthdays, name days of important persons or for events at the Leipzig University, illustrate Bach's dramatic powers, his often earthy sense of humor and his love of nature.

Of the secular cantatas still extant, the majority were created for performance in Leipzig and "Aeolus Appeased" was commissioned in honor of the name day of a member of the faculty there. The libretto of this inflated, far-fetched Olympian romp deals with the god of the winds, Aeolus, who is feeling rambunctious and has decided to let his minions wreak havoc with the earth at the end of the summer. They determine to blast earth's air, darken the sun, storm through the waters and to even trouble the heavens.

Aeolus would make merry with these scenes of destruction, but Zephyrus, the god of gentle breezes, pleads with him to mitigate his frenzy of ruin. Pomona, the goddess of fruit, mourns the condition of her domain and Pallas, the goddess of wisdom, adds her pleas as well, telling Aeolus she is preparing a celebration in honor of the professor. Upon hearing this, the crisis is resolved and all ends happily.

In Olympic terms Pallas wins the Gold, Pomona gets the Silver and Zephyrus the Bronze, but don't look for them in Atlanta. As for this musical piece, it should perhaps be awarded a special Bach cantata Marathon award for being his longest cantata in duration, employing his largest collection of instruments and keeping the participants too busy to play games. ✣

Tuesday evenings devoted to 'Haydn-Seeking' compositions

The Tuesday evening "Haydn-Seeking: An Evening in Vienna" concerts, July 16, 23, and 30, will feature a mixture of Franz Joseph Haydn's work.

Festival Director Nana Faridany explained that Haydn is "one of the major classical composers who came after Bach and was influenced by him." Conductor and Music Director Bruno Weil "is famous for Haydn," Faridany said, citing Weil's recent Cannes Classical Award for the best 17th and 18th century orchestral recording for his CD of Haydn's "Paris" Symphonies. "San Francisco critics say the Haydn here is the best they can hear," Faridany said.

Born in 1732

Franz Joseph Haydn was born in Rohray, Lower Austria, in 1732. He was appointed as kapellmeister for Austria's Esterhazy family in Vienna in 1761 and held that position for 30 years. During this time he wrote innumerable works for the family, including symphonies, masses and operas. A contemporary of Mozart and a devotee of Bach, Haydn died in 1809.

The first work on Tuesday evening's program, the Sinfonia Concertante in B-Flat Major, was written in 1792. The word "concertante" indicates the use of multiple instrumental soloists in an orchestral work, which Haydn did frequently.

Instrumental soloists for the Sinfonia Concertante include Elizabeth Wallfisch, violin; Douglas McNames, cello; Bernhard Heinrichs, oboe; and Jesse Read, bassoon.

The Symphony No. 46 in B Major is one of a group of six symphonies that Haydn composed in the late 1760s and early 1770s while he was in service to the Esterhazy family.

This symphony was completed in 1772 and, according to critics, reveals a bold, impassioned period of Haydn's work. It is thought that Haydn retreated from this type of work later in the decade because the current Prince Esterhazy felt people would associate the works with rising social and political unrest in Europe.

The Missa in angustiis, or Nelson Mass, the third work on the Tuesday night program, is one of six great masses that Haydn wrote between 1796 and 1802. He had been tasked in 1795 to write a mass each year for the Princess Maria Hermengild's birthday.

Conductor and Music Director Bruno Weil started performing these six symphonies, one each year, in 1994, starting with the Heiligemesse, written in 1796. Last year, the Paukenmesse, or Mass in Time of War, was performed. The Nelson Mass was composed in 1798.

The formal title of the work, which means "Mass in time of distress," reflects the threat Napoleon posed to the continent at the time the mass was written. The title Nelson Mass obviously refers to the victories Admiral Horatio Nelson enjoyed at the time Haydn was writing.

Admiral Nelson visited the Esterhazy chateau two years later and met the composer. He asked Haydn to give him the pen with which the mass had been composed, presenting his with a watch in return.

Vocal soloists for the Nelson Mass are Rosa Lamoreaux, soprano; Catherine Robbin, mezzo-soprano; Benjamin Butterfield, tenor; and Christopheren Nomura, baritone. They will be accompanied by the Festival Chorale, Chorus, and Orchestra.

KUSP to broadcast

The Tuesday evening concerts will begin at 8 p.m. at the Sunset Theater, and will be delay-broadcast on KUSP-FM on Tuesday, July 30, at 8:30 p.m. These concerts are presented in memory of the late Howard S. Bucquet, a long-time Carmel resident and Bach Festival supporter.

In addition to the Haydn concert, Dr. Wye J. Allenbrook, professor of music at U.C. Berkeley, will present a free lecture at 10:30 a.m. in Carpenter Hall on Tuesday the 16th entitled "Court and City: The Life and Times of Joseph Haydn." The lecture is open to the public.

– Beth Penney

BRUNO WEIL

that "Doing the Bach Festival in Carmel is the greatest time I have had in my life."

Weil is pleased about the changes he has made in the Festival itself since 1992. "The players and performances are up to international standards," he said. "That's what I wanted." His soloists, he said, are selected on the basis of their work with the material chosen for each year's program.

He is also pleased with the way this year's rehearsals are going, especially those for the Haydn program. "I think it will be a great concert because of the performers and the selections," he said of the Haydn performance, which includes a work that features instrumental soloists and one that features vocal soloists. "The musicians have all the technical ability to do the difficult Haydn."

"Haydn is very close to my nature." Weil said. "He is influenced by folk music and on the other hand very difficult to play." His love of the composer's work drives him to continue his attempt to spread that love.

"I want to make Haydn a successful composer," Weil said. "So I just jumped through the barriers." ✤
